Mr. Thurston's immediate family numbered his mother, widowed sister, and maiden sister, besides his wife and three children, daughter Susie and the two boys that Bernard met, and many men and women servants and laborers. The family was originally from Pennsylvania, but had been many years settled in their beautiful Ohioan home where they had prospered and had surrounded themselves with many comforts and luxuries not often found in so retired a corner of the west. But it could not much longer merit the word retired. A railroad was being built that would pass near the eastern entrance to the valley; and just over that eastern hill a town was already rapidly rising, owing to the impetus Mr. Thurston's business ability and success had given.

This gentleman was a sound, able man with considerable culture, who had endured much during his early years of frontier life, but who had now entered upon the recompense in his paradisiacal home, his increasing wealth, and his decreasing necessity for manual toil. His wife was a fit help-meet, and his children and servants must necessarily gain in goodness with a man of such strength of character, largeness of heart and purity of life.

Bernard had been left to the care of a servant during the night, who reported that he had not roused from his stupor for a moment, but when Mrs. Thurston visited him in the morning, she found him with a helplessness of body and aberration of mind that was piteous in the extreme. He grasped her hand when she came to his bedside and looking up with great staring, blue eyes, wrenched her very heart strings by his exultant words and quavering voice:

"Oh, mother! how did you know that I was here? I am so happy now you have come."

Mrs. Thurston broke down and great sobs shook her frame as she slid an arm under the invalid's shoulders and drew his head to her breast, just as she had strained her dying son to her not long before, and had felt a chill there ever since left by his marble cold brow.

Her husband joined her while yet she stood, the tears chasing each other down her cheeks, but his marvel at the scene was stayed, when Bernard, his sad, wild eyes, catching a glimpse of him drew closer to the woman's side and appealed in earnest words:

"O, sir! Have I been through the vale of tears? Am I in heaven? Life brought nothing of joy equal to the clasp of my mother's own, dear arms. Bid her always stay. Then pain, fatigue, hunger and sin will never reach me."

Mr. Thurston came to his wife's side and while one arm encircled her waist he stroked with the remaining hand Bernard's brow, and assured him with husky voice, "She shall stay, my boy, stay just as long as you want her."

"That is good! Oh, thank you, sir!" and the young man's left hand grasped Mr. Thurston's with a pressure of delight.

Bernard had a long and tedious illness and although a search of his rags had disclosed neither his name nor his character he was given an honored place in the household and attended by all its members with untiring assiduity.

June had come with its banks of roses, soft winds and sunny days before the young man rallied so as to give his nurse hopes of his recovery. He had lain in a stupor for far the larger portion of the period, and when aroused was still wandering in mind and caring for little but Mrs. Thurston's motherly presence. For a number of days he could not be aroused from this torpor while at times his breath was so imperceptible and pulse so slight that death seemed imminent, but God had yet a service for Bernard Larkin to perform, and so one bright morning he quietly opened his eyes and looked up in Mrs. Thurston's sorrowing face with a look of questioning surprise.

His glance wandered from her to his immediate surroundings, while the kind woman sealed her lips from questioning until his returning consciousness should define his mental condition.

He remembered the room and his entrance through the window and felt a sense of mortification at being found in his present position. He made an attempt to rise but found his body a burden that he could not control.

"It was very ill-mannered for me to enter the window and occupy your bed, madam; but I was so tired and it did look so nice."

His voice sounded strange and weak and it cost him an effort to speak, but with an incomplete idea of the cause for it, he continued, "I seem to have taken cold, but I feel very much better and will go away as soon as I get well awake."

"I have something, for you now, my son. Will you have it?" and presenting a bowl and spoon she offered to feed him.

He looked up with a faint smile, "Because I crawled into your bed like a highwayman you need not adopt and pamper me. Could not I feed myself?" The answer came in his vain attempt to lift himself to a sitting posture and the frailness and tremor of his hands when he brought them within his line of vision.

Mrs. Thurston fed him with the amount that she deemed requisite and then after arranging the pillows and coverlid placed near his hands a bunch of fragrant roses. As she turned to perform some duty away from the bed his voice checked her with, "Will you not tell me who you are?"

Mrs. Thurston was a woman of few words, and she had felt a little pang of grief at her patient's relinquishment of her aforetime relationship. She had given him the place once filled by her dead son and had felt such a comfort in doing so that she shrunk with a sudden pain at his question.

"I was your mother until just now," she said longing to keep up the deception while her eyes met his with an anxious look as if she would hinder if possible his denial.

"I have been thinking that my mother was here, but I remember now of leaving her in a sunny corner of Elmwood graveyard. But you have been caring for me just as she would have done and have earned the blessed name of mother."

Mrs. Thurston's self control could not stay her passionate cry as she kissed Bernard's brow, "my boy! my boy! God sent you to me and has turned your face from death in answer to my prayer. I thank God!"

"Then I have been sick," he hesitated a second but bravely said it "mother? have I been near death?"

"I fear so, but you are better now and must leave the talking until you are stronger;" and smoothing his upraised cheek with one hand she brushed a mist from her eyes with the other.

"I believe that I am Bernard Larkin. Mother, just one more question, please. How long have I been here?"

"Five weeks to-morrow night. No more now," and she turned away with a significant manner.

Later in the day he attempted to give her an account of himself but she bade him wait until the succeeding day and then delayed it still one more.

When the second day came his recital was not to be stayed; he was much stronger and developed so much positivism that she sat down by his bed and while she held his hands, brushed his brown locks now fast thinning, or stroked his cheeks he told his story. He told "a round, unvarnished tale," and he found when it was through that his listener's complete absorption in his story had incited him to more thoroughly express thoughts and sentiments than was his wont.

He had lived an inner life, all show of which was carefully concealed until this quiet-faced, simple little woman with her motherly ways and sweet, encouraging voice entered with him into its depths. She saw the purity of his heart, and worth of his character, and she understood the habits of reticence and reserve that had made his career a failure, that had declared his every trial a calamity and a defeat and had pressed his strongest and best emotions back to their springs to rankle and stultify his life.

"Life has been hard to you, Bernard. But now you have only to think of getting well and when that is accomplished we will think and talk of other things," was her only reply. His strength increased rapidly and when one after another of the members of the family had been presented to him and he realized the place in their hearts that he had unconsciously entered a strange and complete happiness fell upon him. His last year's ignominy and suffering was compensated for, and, it seemed, obliterated by the love and sympathy thus lavishly bestowed upon him. Laughingly he would look up and remark, "Mother, how can I get well when I fear this petting will cease on the departure of its cause?"

On the day when Bernard, arrayed in a new and becoming suit of clothes that Mr. Thurston's considerate kindness had caused to be prepared for him, made his appearance in the family sitting room leaning on that gentleman's strong arm, the joy of all the house was expressed in so emphatic an utterance that tears filled the young man's eyes and choked his voice.

Every kindness and thoughtful attention was lavished upon him, while Bernard gave himself up to the novelty of his situation and accepted them as if they were his birthright. He saw that they were dictated by loving hearts and he had been a stroller too long, longing for home and friends, to toss back such gifts now.

But when his usual strength returned, its accompaning energy, and superabundance of animal spirits made his position a trying one, and over and again he determined to go away. To hear the boys' lessons, practice music with Miss Susie and Aunt Bel, read to Mrs. Thurston, ride, drive or walk with any of the ladies, mope in the house, or stroll through the valley, were all very well in their places, but when they were left to compose the life of a stirring young man, anxious to begin his career, there must needs arise discontent and unrest.

At last he settled to go away. It might appear ingratitude, but his present existence would lead him to some worse unthankfulness if he remained.

He knew not how to broach the subject, and the task was becoming more difficult. Mrs. Thurston was not well—a weakness, she was never very strong—and she was depending upon him for little attentions that disclosed how large a place he held in her heart.

"Oh, Bernard! my strong, handsome boy! what a blessing your coming has been to me," she said one afternoon, as he tarried by the side of the couch on which she was lying.

"You are a flatterer, mother. How have I blessed you?"

"I can hardly tell. The loss of my son took away the worth of my life, and I forgot that husband and other children were spared me. You called me "mother," and your suffering touched my bruised and sullen nature. By your sick bed I have learned truths that had been presented to me before in vain. During those silent watches Christ made his loving presence manifest to me."

Bernard found no words to reply, and only carried her hands to his trembling lips. A dirty vagabond like him to have brought joy and comfort to a storm-tossed heart!

"Now, Bernard," she said, her voice taking a persuading strain, "You are to tell me why you are unhappy, and what it is you are brooding over. We all seek your pleasure."

"O, mother! you are all doing too much to enhance my happiness. I can never repay you."

"We desire to see you happy, and to keep you always with us. Is that too large an interest on our little principal?"

Bernard knew not what to say. Remain there in ease and idleness! How could he be happy? His debtor was claiming usurious interest.

Mrs. Thurston was searching his face. Before his quandary was settled she broke in upon it.

"Will you give me your confidence, after I have said what I wish, Bernard? Mr. Thurston has felt Carlo's loss as much, perhaps more than I did, because he had become a sharer in his father's cares and enterprises. Now, Bernard, my husband would like to give you that son's place, but fears to suggest it or burden you with any of his figures or ideas, fearing it might bear the appearance of an attempt to bind you on the score of gratitude. Will you think about it and then give father an opportunity to talk with you."

"I have thought while you were speaking, mother, and will now give you my confidence. Every thing that has fretted me since I have been getting well, is a distaste for ease, and a desire to go at some earnest work. I cannot labor because of this poor arm, but my left one, and my brains and muscles are clamorous for employment. If I can be a help to father, or you, then I am a cheerful worker ready to serve the rest of my life to repay my debt."

Mrs. Thurston saw the shadow depart from the young man's face simultaneously with its dislodgement from his heart, and kissing him a "God speed" she sent him away to talk with her husband.

The two men conferred long and earnestly, while Mrs. Thurston watched them with eager eyes as they passed from mill to store-houses, barns, and workshops.

She had devined Bernard's thought of going away, and felt a pang of regret, but her quick wit had given the suggestion to her husband and prepared the way for its reception, and when they returned to her together, she was satisfied that she had accomplished a good work.

Bernard had now found such a field of usefulness as his brightest dreams had never visioned, and he grew strong, brave and sagacious in performing the duties that came to him, and bold and clear in planning others, so that Mr. Thurston ere many months found that his adopted son was "a blessing" to him, and was rapidly increasing his wealth and importance.

Bernard was happy to find that the labors of his body and mind were at last crowned with success, and he felt a trifle of pride whenever any idea or action of his received a modicum of praise, as he remembered that he had been stigmatized as shiftless and good-for-nothing.

But he was learning a sweeter joy than business success could give. He was learning that Susie Thurston's face bore beauties that no other did, that her every day existence was eloquent with lovely virtues, and that her voice stole into the recesses of his heart with a witching power.

He did not ask or receive the girl's love without doubts and trepidations, but his love grew until hey were set at rest, thus "many things were made light, that else lie hidden in darkness."

Friends that could give him home, love and wealth, could but bestow on him the daughter also, and so Bernard Larkin found in the West all that he sought.

SHE "TELESCOPED OUT."—"Tickets!" said a conductor on the Illinois Central railroad, standing beside a large Irish woman with apparantly three children.

The woman put up one full and two half-fare tickets.

"How old is that girl?" inquired the conductor, looking suspiciously at a young lady holding possession of half a seat.

"Shur an' she's on the nigh side of 10 years."

"Ten years?" said the conductor, "she looks like a widow woman. Let her stand up a while and rest herself."

"Well, but, conductor, she's tall; her sthanding is very much longer than her age; but sthand up, Margaret, sthand up, and av he would look at your tathe, show 'em, Margaret."

The girl, who was sitting sailor style on the seat, commenced to unlimber herself, and as she towered up in the daylight, she looked like a lighthouse rising out of a breaking fog. The conductor took a bird's-eye-view of her proportions, and then said:

"I'll take another half fare for this little girl, I guess. I thought she'd show off to better advantage after she telescoped out."

A FLOATING PALACE.—In additional to the short rail travel which affords the traveller by the popular Fall River Line an easy journey to New York City, the new and elegant steamer Pilgrim has been put on and is now making regular trips on that line. It was built especially for the Fall River Line at a cost of one million dollars, and is the largest and most elegant boat on the Sound. A trial trip was made June 12, and since then thousands of people have been charmed and delighted by a trip to and from New York. A special drawing room car named after the steamer herself, is run between Boston and Fall River, thus adding still further to the comforts which are always afforded the traveller on the line of the Old Colony R. R. The Pilgrim is lighted throughout with the Edison incandescent electric system, and the beauty of the light is no less admired than the exquisite and manifold designs in which the fixtures are wrought. Carpets, mirrors, chairs, state-room furnishings, and all the interior outfit is of the richest description, and harmonizes beautifully with the wall tints and decorations.

The following are a few solid facts in reference to the boat which are taken from the official sketch of the Pilgrim, and from which our readers can get some faint idea of her immense size and will have little difficulty in realizing that she is indeed a floating palace. Her length on deck is 390 feet; depth from floor to top of dome 60 feet; the cylinder to the main engine is 110 inches in diameter; the stroke of piston is 14 feet; there are twelve steel boilers of 5500 horsepower; the paddle wheels are 41 feet in diameter and weigh 85 tons each; her hull has 103 water tight compartments; electric annunciators connect with each room, requiring 5 miles of copper wire to complete the circuit; the lighting is by electricity, there being immense electroliers in the saloons, and 912 electric lamps with 11,356 candle power, each lamp being from 10 to 16 candle power. The grand saloon is 320 feet and will hold 1400 passengers, the ladies' parlor is 70 feet long, the furniture being covered with elegant maroon velvet, costing not less than $10 per yard. There are 7 bridal staterooms every one unlike each other. The capacity for freight is also immense there being abundant storage for fifty car loads. The dining hall contains 16 tables and will seat 190 persons. The steering is done by machinery, a Sickle Steam Steerer being used, whereby one man can do the work of eight. The officers of this boat, as also of the companion boat, the Bristol, which is run on this line, are unremitting in their attention, and every comfort desired by the passenger is provided. The popularity of the Fall River Line to New York was never greater than now.

Would that all laboring men were as sensible as those composing the New York Central Labor Union. After discussing Denis Kearney, the members refused to allow him to talk to them. In the words of one of them: "We don't want a broken down political hack horse like Kearney to address us." Now this is sound sense. When working men recognize that they have nothing to gain by listening to the appeals of demagogues, politicians and professional agitators, they show that they are good citizens and are honest in their intentions. There are too many labor orgánizations which simply exist as a bob to some politician's kite.—Manufacturer's. Gazette.

THE WESTERN Union Telegraph Co. has been too much of a monopoly to be popular with the mass of the people. Not content with its own lines it has endeavored to control all its rivals, and in this it has been, in the main, successful. It has declared large dividends on watered stock, and this, too, while it has reduced the wages of its employes and has not reduced the cost of service to the public. The name of Jay Gould, who is familiarly associated with the speculations of Wall street, is also associated with this company. It is therefore natural that public sympathy among the large merchants, as well as the laboring class of our people, should be with the telegraphers in their organized strike.

We are not in favor of strikes. And it must not be forgotten that this movement, in its essential principles, partakes of all the elements of any labor strike. The men and women who are thus united are in the main skilled laborers. This must of necessity be the case. The telegraph operator must be intelligent, active, and of good education. But they are under the control of the leaders, who entirely direct their movements, who have ordered this strike without an attempt at arbitration, and are using every means at their command, except force, to prevent others from being employed by the Telegraph Company.

It may be urged that this movement extends beyond, in its influence, the employers and employed. And this is true. The telegraph companies are bound to perform certain services to the public. It is under these conditions that they are allowed to do business.—This service they must perform. The public who pay for this service, and a good price for it, care nothing for the differences between them and the employes. It is this relation which will cause sympathy to be given the strikers and will prove a more formidable opponent of the Telegraph Companies than the vast number of the striking brotherhood can be.

The strike will also lead to a reduction of the business of the company—and this would doubtless be the effect if the company were able to supply the places of the strikers. The telegraph has been used in many cases from force of habit and from rivalry, rather than actual necessity. This is especially the case with our business people.—Traveling salesmen have wired their orders to the houses which they represented, not because of unnecessary haste, but to get the business off their hands. Many orders are sent by wire between Boston and New York, and other leading points, which can be of equal service by mail. Particularly is this so during the late hours of the day. A letter posted in our office at 6 o'clock at night is in New York City the next morning. The increase of our postal facilities has rendered it a formidable rival in speed to the telegraph.

Between short distances the advantages of the telephone will become more apparent. In many respects the telephone, properly managed, is superior to the telegraph, the principal advantage being direct communication between the parties desiring to converse. This obviates the necessity of waiting for a reply to a message, and, when one is accustomed to its use, it more than takes the place of the telegraph between reasonable distances.

There is a point in the movement which is worthy of especial mention. A demand is made that the female operatives shall receive the same pay as the men. Telegraphy is a business in which women are particularly efficient, and some of the best operators are of the female sex. We see no reason why, if they do the same labor, they should not receive the same pay. And the demand made by the brotherhood that the telegraph companies should recognize their rights shows that in this department of labor there is no jealousy between male and female employes. The movement in this respect is to be commended.

THE OUTCOME, thus far, of the Tewksbury investigation is what might reasonably be expected. It is doubtful if the opinions of any one are changed by reading either of the reports to the Legislature. One is entirely the opposite of the other—and it is hard to believe that from the same evidence such varying opinions of the Institution could be formed.

In the minority report there is one remark which displays in a pointed manner the animus of those who take their entire cue from Butler. The word libertine is applied to young Marsh in their report, and this by members of the Legislature who are supposed to weigh the evidence given at an investigation in making up a report. Will any one tell us of a single bit of evidence that has been given, either by Butler's witnesses or any one else, tending to show this? There is none. And when such falsehood as this is resorted to in order that the case may be bolstered up, it must be weak indeed. We do not claim—the Republican party does not claim—that the administration of the Marshes has been perfect. It is very probable that the vacation of the office by Marsh was a part of wisdom, and it is even possible that a change might well have been made some years ago. But all the evidence goes to show that the complaints made date back into previous years, and that for the last five years there has been little to find fault with. Blackguardism and insult is not evidence, and nothing is gained by an attempt to make it so.

In this connection the treatment of Miss O'Connell by Gen. Butler cannot be too strongly condemned. Gen. Butler says, "Call this little chit a matron. She is only fit to go riding with Tom Marsh." Now there is no evidence that she was ever called a matron. She was never so mentioned in the reports. But there is evidence that she has been for several years a faithful and efficient attendant, and the only thing against her, in the opinion of Gen. Butler, is that she is good looking. That she is presumably a Catholic ought not to prejudice any one against her. And the back-handed thrust against her character will do Butler no good, and with reasonable people will do him an infinite amount of harm. We should imagine that our Catholic friends would hardly relish this thrust at a young lady whose character, with the exception of Butler's insult, is unsullied, and who, from all the evidence that can be obtained, is not only competent but useful in the Institution.

THE ASSESSORS have finished their valuation for the year 1883, and have determined the rate of taxation, which is to be 15.40. The valuation is viz: Real estate $4,305,100 against $4,219,600 last year; personal estate $2,402,100 against $2,396,550 last year; total $6,707,200 against $6,616,150 last year. There is a gain of $85,500 in real estate and $5,500 in personal; total, 91,050. This gain in valuation is mostly in real estate, and is a legitimate gain. There are several new factories, and a number of new houses in different parts of the town, which have been built since the last year, and there has been no increase in valuation, but a solid gain in legitimate value. The amount to be raised this year is, town tax $90,000, state tax, $6,030, county tax $8,156.50; total $104,186.50. The whole number of polls is 2,529 against 2,317 last year; a gain of 212. Had the amount of state tax been $2,000,000 as reported by the Legislature, instead of $1,500,000, our proportion of the tax would have been $8,049 and this would not have effected the rate of taxation over 10-100 on the percentage. The town voted to raise less this year by taxation than last, and we have gained as stated in valuation and polls. There are some people in town, who claim to have thought the tax this year would be very much larger than last. What a comforting surprise it must be to them when they look at their tax bills?

The facilities for a trip to Nahant are greatly increased by the horse railroad, which connects with barges directly to that famous resort, and in this connection, we desire to say that there is no better place to get a dinner than at the "Tri-mountain." You will be well and promptly served. Cut this out, and bear it in mind when you go to Nahant.

The Naumkeag Clothing Co., of Salem, have taken account of stock and propose to close out the balance of their stock of goods, at prices which have no reference to either their cost or real value. There will be some astonished customers, at the store of the Naumkeag for the next few weeks.

A Trip to Lynn.

The business relations between the citizens of our town and Lynn are already leading to an acquaintance, by our people, with the capacious and well filled stores of our neighboring city. Before the opening of the railroad, Lynn to many people was an unknown city. Even now they are comparatively strangers to the merchants of that place. With a view, therefore, of giving our readers a little insight into the stores of Market and Union streets—their methods of doing business and their facilities for trade, we took a car last week under the direction of conductor George Howard, who, by the way, is a Peabody boy, and were soon speeding to that city. The cars of the Lynn & Boston railroad, after passing City Hall, enter at once Market Street, one of the great centers of trade. Our first stop is at the shoe store of S. J. Berry & Co., an establishment whose methods of business are comparatively new to New England. It is a parlor store where nothing but ladies and misses' goods are kept or sold. In New York and Philadelphia the business of selling ladies' shoes is always kept separate from stores for men's goods. Here it is a novelty, and the store just mentioned is the only one in Massachusetts. The lady manager has been ten years in business, having learned fitting in the large and well known establishment of John Wanamaker of Philadelphia. Mr. Berry attends to the manufacturing, all the goods being made expressly for sale at their store. They make a specialty of fine hand sewed boots, and carry three measures, one over the instep, thus ensuring a perfect and easy fit. All the goods are warranted of the best quality, and are sold at from $1.00 to $1.50 lower than at first class stores in Boston. They also take measures for boots to be made to order. Near by is the candy kitchen and ice cream establishment of Nador & Taylor, whose windows are very attractively arranged. Mr. Nador is well known to our Peabody people, from his former store in Salem, and his ice cream wagon is frequently seen on our streets. He supplies parties and families here to order, and his cream is the finest we have ever eaten. Just across the street at No. 42, is the art store of Smith & Robinson, the finest in the city. Their store is spacious, light and elegantly appointed. Their assortment of engravings and paintings, framed and unframed, is large and rich. They do their own gilding, and some of the frames are most elaborately finished. Their store is in itself a picture—being a constant rest to the eye. They carry a full line of samples of decorated placques, done by Lynn talent, and in artist's materials their line is unusually full and complete, canvasses, papers, paints, tiles—everything that the artist can require for any description of work. They are by no means confined, however, to this branch—doing a large stationery and blank book business—carrying the finest of papers by the pound, also photograph albums, fans, etc., besides being agents for Esty organs and Haines pianos. We again retrace our steps across the street, and proceed down Market street a few blocks, when we are attracted by a magnificently trimmed window, filled with hats, caps, and gents' furnishing goods. This is the store of Charles S. Goodridge, a corner store, and one of the finest locations in Lynn. Just now he is making wonderfully attractive prices in straw hats, being determined to carry no goods of this description to the next season. His assortment of gents' ties is almost endless, being arranged in large show cases, the 25, 50 and 75 cent ones being in a show case by themselves. Mr. Goodridge keeps also bathing suits, hammocks, canes, umbrellas, and everything needed in a first class gents' furnishing store, all at the very bottom prices. There are also shown a large assortment of mens' dusters at 50 cents each, and boys' at 25 cents—prices such as were never known before in this line of goods. We pass down the street to No. 75, where is the well appointed house furnishing store of F. B. Stevens. Here is a general house furnishing store, stoves of all kinds, lamps, crockery and kitchen goods. Mr. Stevens is a young man of a deal of push, and in a short business experience in Lynn has built up a remarkable trade. In oil stoves he makes a specialty of the "Garland," of which brand Mr. Stevens has sold 110 this year. This for a new stove is a good record. It is made by the Barstow Stove Company, and many advantages are claimed for it over other oil stoves, among them being two holes, besides one for the oven, giving the housewife an opportunity to steam, boil and bake at the same time. Mr. Stevens is agent for all the goods of the Barstow Furnace Company, including the Bay State range and furnace. Across the street we again wend our way, and enter store No. 84, the Market Street store of Welman Osborne. Here everybody is busy. The clerks are hurrying to and fro, and the customers are coming and going. A part of the cause of this commotion is the sale of a large stock of boots and shoes which Mr. Osborne has bought at a great sacrifice, the benefit of which he intends to give his customers, who come not only from Lynn, but from all the country around. Everybody in Lynn knows Osborne. His business, both wholesale and retail, is tremendous. Another store in West Lynn, larger by 40 feet than the one on Market street, is managed by him. The stores are crowded with goods, three tiers high. The salesmen have to use step ladders to wait upon the customers, and the goods are at such marvelously low prices, that to see is to purchase. We are now about halfway down Market street, and we pause in wonder at the mammoth establishment of W. B. Gifford & Co., probably the largest dry goods store in Essex County. There is a large front entrance with double doors, show windows of immense proportions, on each side, and crossing the threshold we stand before a circular counter, behind which a young lady is measuring ribbons, and look down the store. On the right is dress goods, hosiery and gloves, on the left linens and domestics, while in the rear is a cloak and suit room, and Millinery department. On all sides is evidence of large assortments of goods, prompt attendance and low prices. Up stairs is the carpet room, a light, cheerful and well proportioned room, and in the rear a large assortment of wall papers, shades of all kinds for windows, and upholstery goods. Our space will not allow us to describe minutely this colossal establishment, and as we pass by the Central Station of the Lynn and Boston railroad, we notice the sign on the corner of Market street of our old friend Courtis, formerly of the Lynn Transcript, but now of the firm of Courtis & Breare, book-binders. Their bindery and rooms are up two flights, but one is more than repaid for the journey up, by the view from the windows of the office which is there obtained. This firm do a large business in binding. All their work is first class and they make a specialty of binding Magazines, in all styles of covers. Mr. S. F. Reed, is agent in this town for the firm and those of our readers who do not find it convenient to call at their establishment, where, however, they will be courteously received, can leave their orders with Mr. Reed. Opposite the depot is Union street, another busy place, and alive with people. It is a formidable rival to Market street, and contains many large and handsome stores.

Going up from the station, on the left, the first store that we enter is that of W. F. Goldsmith & Co., carpet dealers, where is shown a large line of Wiltons, Moquettes, Brussels and all grades of carpetings. Connected with this work they keep a large line of shades, poles and upholstery goods, and take orders for contract work, fitting up entire houses. Their quarters are somewhat limited for their business and it is the intention of this firm to utilize the next store, also owned by the firm, but not now occupied by them, remove the partition and make one large store for a show room. A little further up the street, on the corner, and occupying an area of 25,000 square feet, is the establishment of the L. A. May Co., the largest house furnishing store in the county. This store is a wonder, and there can hardly be an article thought of in their line, which does not meet the eye as we pass up and down the store. There is glass and plated ware, the goods of the Meriden Brittania and Derby Silver Co., the knives, forks and spoons of the Rogers Plating Co., the best in the world. There is every kind of tin ware, from the small pans to the larger ones, for bakers' use, of which this firm make a specialty, there are kerosene and gas fixtures, oil stoves, of all makes, Eddy's refrigerators, ice cream freezers, crockery, china, and lamps, an endless array. There are ranges of all sizes and kinds, the Magee, Model and Crawford—everything in hardware, which is a store in itself, and in a room occupying a space equal to an ordinary store, are second hand stoves, in which the firm do a large business. Up stairs are garden implements, rubber hose and wooden ware, besides an immense capacity for the storing of duplicates of their goods. They also do plumbing, piping and gas fitting, as well as repairing of all kinds. The firm was established in 1836, and is one of the fixtures of Union street. We are, however, tempted across the street, and find another fine and well appointed dry goods store—that of J. E. Burrows. Mr. Burrows has some fine show windows, and he makes the most of them by an attractive display of his goods. A specialty in this store is a large worsted department—probably the best selected in the city, and in Spanish laces, neckwear, hosiery and gloves, there are shown all the novelties of the markets of Boston and New York. Mr. Burrows shows a choice line of dress goods in the season, including some specialties in Black Silks, and the store is well patronized by the ladies of Lynn and vicinity. Retracing our steps on the same side, we enter the furniture establishment of Welch & Cummings, only three years in business, but doing a large and rapidly increasing trade. The secret of it is low prices, fair dealing and one price only. Every article purchased at this store, no matter at how small a price, is warranted, and the firm mean that every one shall get the full worth of their money. All the parlor furniture is finished in the best manner, the upholstering and every part of the work being done by the firm, and in the best manner. Opposite their ware rooms is a large shop where the painting is done,—all their wood sets being painted under their supervision, and everything is fresh, clean, and perfect. There are black walnut and ash chamber sets, book cases, and everything usually found in a well appointed furniture store. They occupy four stories, and this is hardly sufficient to accommodate their rapidly increasing trade. But the afternoon is nearly spent, and we wend our way homeward, but on our way stop at the Marble works of Kavanagh & Carlton, on Boston street—the horse cars passing their door. Here is seen some very fine workmanship, from the ordinary marble stone, to the most elaborately carved monument, and we are told that many of the richest designs are patterned by this firm. It is indeed an art requiring not only skill in workmanship but ornateness of design. The firm have already set several stones in Peabody, among them being an elegant marble tablet in Cedar Grove Cemetery for Mrs. W. F. Shumway. We are once more in the cars, on the six o'clock trip to Peabody, at which time two cars are always run, to accommodate the workmen residing in So. Peabody.

PEABODY.

The condition of the George Peabody lot at Harmony Grove Cemetery is not creditable to this town. The lot is sadly in need of grading, as in some places the soil is thin and overgrown with sorrell, while in others the grass is nearly a foot high. The tomb is visited at this season of the year by a large number of strangers and a beaten path in the tall grass has been made in front of the monument that graces the lot. The edgestones are partly covered with tree moss and the marble panels forming a part of the base of the monument are rusty and soiled. The whole place has a neglected look. Our town officers are not to blame for this, as Mr. Peabody left heirs who should have respect enough for his memory to look after it, but still it would be better if the town authorities or trustees of the Institute took the matter under consideration. The expense of keeping the lot in repair would be trifling.

Patrick Garvey, a brother to Anthony and Billy, and better known as "Sonny," was removed to the Massachusetts General Hospital last week. He met with an accident in Salem about a month ago, when he fell into a trench and dislocated his hip bone. Since then he has not had proper care, and has been a great sufferer. The flesh has been decaying around the wound for want of medical attendance, and the delay in treatment makes his case a serious one at the present time. The career of this young man has been a checkered one, as he has always been a reckless, wild fellow. It seems sad, however, that proper efforts were not made to relieve his condition.

The Lawrence American says:—A new house is to be erected on the sightly location between Mr. Frothingham's home and Col. Johnson's residence, opposite "Hill Crest" No. Andover. The structure which will be quite ornamental in design, will be the home of Mr. John H. Sutton, and its estimated cost, when finished, is $20,000. Dorman, of Lawrence, has been awarded the contract for the mason work. As yet, the carpenter's contract has not been given out. Mr. Sutton married Miss Mamie Jacobs of this town.

A Lowell gentleman came down in the morning train yesterday, to spend the day with his family at the Willows. He went to several barber shops and found them closed; therefore he went to Peabody and was shaved. He said he had no difficulty in finding places in Salem, where he could satisfy thirst and hunger, but couldn't get a clean face.—Salem Register. Peabody is always glad to accommodate.

The new advertisement of F. W. Lucas & Co., cannot fail of being noticed by our readers. This store keeps up its reputation for the best of goods at low prices. Their assortment is always full and complete, and all are assured of an easy and comfortable fitting shoe.

Yesterday the Iron Steamboat Company of New York entered the excursion business in our New England waters, by placing the iron steamer "Taurus," on a regular line between Boston and Portsmouth, N. H. The steamer is to leave Liverpool sharp, foot of Pearl street, at 9.30, every morning, leaving Portsmouth on the return trip at 2.30 P. M., arriving in Boston at 6.30. The boat has been on the line to Coney Island in New York harbor, and is nearly as large as the Empire State. Yesterday a large number of invited guests, including members of the press and their lady friends, took a trial trip to Minot's ledge light, returning to the wharf about 5.30 P. M. The boat is unlike our harbor boats, New York style in all respects, with lunch and lager beer counters in open sight in the forward cabin. The fare to Portsmouth and return is one dollar.

Mr. David T. Winter is never idle and has been devoting some of his leisure time to the invention of a lawn mower, which so far works very satisfactorily. The object attained is, that it will cut grass at any length and what is better it cuts all the grass and does not leave a row of trodden grass as the common lawn mower does.

A party who frequents the depot, told us the following story this week. A little bird built its nest in a little nick of one of J. B. Thomas' Refrigerator cars that stood on a side track below the depot. The car made several trips, when the freight was being shifted, yet the little brooder held to its nest until its fidelity was rewarded, by the bringing up of an interesting family, neither one of which will ever know the exact place of its nativity.

The box social is the latest scheme in the way of church socials. Each lady brings a box of some kind of eatables for two, and the gents have to purchase at random, and do not know whose box they are purchasing or what they are going to get to eat until they are purchased. The handsomer and more attractive the boxes can be made, the better. Which church will start the fun?

A couple of wringer canvassers did a good business in town last week. Queer that some people had rather buy of a peddler than the regular dealer.

It is gratifying to report that the crops in this section were never at this time of the year in a more prosperous condition.

Always in debt and no real necessity for it—the letter B.

PLACE OF INTEREST to visit while in Boston, is the Warerooms of PAINE'S Furniture Manufacturing Co., 48 Canal Street, opposite Maine Depot. There you will find many curious imported pieces, as well as the largest assortment of fine furniture, lace curtains, and rich upholstery goods to be found in America. If you wish a book of illustrations, send postal card to the above address, and a new illustrated book of designs will be sent you.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

One of the most pleasant and enjoyable excursions of the season was that which left Salem yesterday on the Empire State for Provincetown. The steamer passed the Willows and Marblehead and then headed across the bay for Cape Cod. Everybody was happy, and the excursionists, who numbered about 800, were in a joyous mood. At a quarter of two the boat arrived at Provincetown and one hour was allowed to recreate in that pleasant old town. Many of the party climbed the Town Hill on the top of which the town house used to stand until it burned down some time ago, and has not since been rebuilt. The main thoroughfare is a narrow street and conforms to the many devious ways of the shore on which the town is built. At quarter of three the boat left Provincetown and steamed back over our morning track, arriving in Salem shortly after seven, P. M., all feeling that to appreciate its pleasure a personal experience is necessary. Among those present from Peabody were the following: Theresa Hickey, Elmeretta Lawrence, J. J. Heylinberg and daughter, Geo. Boynton, Ella M. Boynton, Frank A. Warner, Warren C. Osborne, James E. Millea, Peter C. Mead, Joseph Hart, Katie Lyons, M. F. Kelly, C. D. Howard and daughter, Wm. S. Osborne, Andrew Johnson, Otis Ferrin, Albert Carlton, Wm. Carlton, Kendall Osborne, James Ferrin and Dr. C. S. Wright. A Band Concert was given in the large saloon, and singing by little Bessie Murray, only nine years of age, and dancing on the lower deck were among the attractions. All spoke in terms of praise of the courtesy of Capt. Phillips, his officers and crew; and many were the congratulations extended the Salem Mechanic Light Infantry, under whose auspices the trip was arranged, upon its success. The committee having it in charge did all in their power to make the occasion the pleasant one it was.

Last Saturday the matter of a branch railway was presented to the Selectmen, and to-day the subject will be submitted to the officials of the Eastern Railroad. The petitioners are Thomas E. Proctor and Richardson Doyle & Co. The object is the more readily to transfer freight and to receive bark, hides, etc., at their factories and save the expense and delay of carting them. There have been several routes proposed, one to leave the track near Richardson & Doyle's factory across lots to Proctor's, and another which would serve the greatest number is to extend the tracks from the freight yard on Central street, down Walnut, with a spur track to Hardy's and John A. Lord, Jr's., by J. E. Clement & Co's. to Richardson & Doyle's and from them to Proctor's. This is a subject that should be considered in all its points. Whatever serves to increase the business of the town, or bring business to it, is of the utmost advantage to the town.

Marked improvement has been made in the old King Cemetery. Mr. N. M. Quint has handsomely graded the lot and put in some fine granite posts furnished from Mr. James Butler's yard at Salem. The remains of the Upton family have been removed from the Eben King tomb, by undertaker W. S. Osborne, and seven brick graves have been built by Mr. James A. Trask to receive them. This brings the graves of the Upton family together. The lot will receive the necessary care in the future.

There was a narrow escape from a collision between a freight train and the Salem picnic train which passed through here last Wednesday morning, near Haggett's pond, which was averted only by the promptness of the conductor of the regular passenger who signalled the freight on to a siding, almost in the face of the approaching picnic train. Had the collision occurred the loss of life would have been great.

Mr. Sylvanus Chadwick, while at work on a new splitting machine at Brown & Stanley's, last week, severely crushed his fingers by being caught in the machine, necessitating the amputation of the fore finger of the left hand. Drs. Pike and Weston performed the operation. Mr. Chadwick was taking the place of Mr. Edward Warren, recently injured.

The Danvers Mirror says of a former townsman: "Henry M. Merrill has bought from the Page estate, and from Mrs. Martha Goodell of Salem, the house and lot on Elm Street occupied by Mrs. H. N. Black, and the vacant lot between that and Page Street, and will build a fine residence there this season.

FIRE DEPARTMENT NOTES.—Engineer Lord is again confined to his house by his old enemy, the rheumatism, and Engineer Folsom has been in the invalid corps for the past week with a bad foot, caused by scalding.

John A. P. Sumner, of steamer two, will listen for the alarm bell, for the next two weeks, in Moultonboro, N.H.

About three weeks ago the drivers of the department were turned over to the charge of the Engineers for nights and Sundays, and George Morgan was appointed the relief driver, in order to give the regular drivers a Sunday off duty once a month. Two of the drivers have taken advantage of the new order and taken their day, but the other seems to hang back. Driver Morgan was away last Sunday.

The next regular meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Relief will be held on Tuesday evening, Aug. 1st.

A number of the firemen are supplying themselves with badges, made by a Boston firm. Every fireman in the department should be provided with one at the time when he receives his keys, and the town should furnish them as well as the rubber coats, for the men do not get sufficient pay to spend it all for the town.

The Grand Firemen's Muster to be held in Portsmouth, N. H., the last of August, will be taken in by a large part of the department. H. & L., Steamer 1, Hose 1 & 2 are talking of attending in a body and probably some of the other companies will attend.

Salem has just added a number of rubber covers to its department, and this town should have some also, but it should be the duty of the insurance underwriters to furnish them as they are the ones that would receive the greatest benefit from them. F. J.

A man named Griffin while bathing at Spring pond, was bitten on the hand by a black spider last Sunday, and in a short time his hand was badly swollen and it extended up the arm to the shoulder. He was in consideradle pain. A physician was called and an effort made to prevent its extending farther.

A disgraceful family row culminated last Sunday, in a still more disgraceful assault by Geo. W. Davis, upon his brother-in-law, Lewis E. Allen. There are many conflicting reports concerning the case, and considerable excitement in this part of the town. The details will be brought out in full at the hearing before the court next week. Davis was arrested yesterday and held in $3000 bonds. Allen's jaw was badly broken, and it is feared he is internally injured.

Born. A son to Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Pike.

We know Heylinberg's reputation for keeping first class barbers, but were hardly prepared to see the familiar face of one of our leading physicians, as we did last Monday, engaged in shaving a man before the glass there. But he did it to the man's satisfaction we think, at least we have not heard of any report to the contrary. There was considerabie "Piquancy" about th business anyhow.

One of the handsome pair of black driving horses belonging to Mr. J. B. Thomas had its jaw broken while at pasture, yesterday. It is supposed she was kicked by one of the other horses. She was a valuable animal.

TO THE PUBLIC!

We have always possessed the idea that the poor man's hard earned dollar should purchase just as much as a like amount of his wealthy neighbor.—WE BELIEVE IT. WE ACT UPON IT. Three years ago it was hard to convince customers that a firm in the FURNITURE business would or could make such a departure. WE DID, and our business to-day is a pleasing monument of its kindly reception by the people of Lynn, Swampscott, Saugus, Nahant, Marblehead, Peabody, Danvers, Lynnfield, Salem, &c., to whom we are more than thankful.

THOSE WHO USE IT, SAY

No subject of importance has been neglected in the People's Cyclopedia.—Portland (Me.) Press.

I use The People's Cyclopedia constantly. I should take it in preference to any other popular work. Z. A. SMITH, of Editorial Staff of Boston Journal.

I have formed a very high opinion of The People's Cyclopedia, based upon knowledge derived from daily use. THOS. DREW, Literary Ed. Boston Herald.

Before examining The People's Cyclopedia, I could not conceive how so good a work could be made. I can not now imagine how a better one can be made. S. W. MASON, LL. D., Supervisor Schools, Boston.

I deem it an admirable work. It covers the field of knowledge effectively, and gives just that information which all want. In short, it is just the book for reading thinking Americans. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Brooklyn.

I have given an examination to The People's Cyclopedia, and find that it answers what I believe to be the want of a work of that class. I can recommend it for the office and for the use of the business men of the country. BENJ. F. BUTLER Gov.

I am sure I never found before so much for the money. I candidly, carefully and conscientiously recommend it. ALFRED S. ROE, Prin. High School, Worcester.

I have long been anxious to find a satisfactory work of this kind, for use in the public schools. The more I have examined this work, the more I have been delighted with its remarkable merits. H. F. HARRINGTON, Supt. Public Schools, New Bedford.

When I had finished a careful examination of The People's Cyclopedia, I decided to purchase it, although I already possessed the Britannica, American and Johnson's Universal. Each of these great works has merits peculiarly its own, but it may, in my judgment, be truly said of The People's, that it furnishes more information for the money than any work extant. Col. JOHN D. WASHBURN, Worcester, Mass.

A valuable book for practical use. It is full of things which we want to know but cannot readily get access to. J. W. PATTERSON, Ex-U. S. Senator and Supt. Pub. Schools, N. H.

I find that it fills my idea of clearness and brevity. It is a work that would be of great advantage to every teacher and pupil in our schools. CHARLES MORRILL, Supt. of Pub. Schools, Lowell, Mass.

I am especially pleased with its freshness and accuracy, its brevity and clearness of statement, and at the same time its fulness and completeness, making it, in my opinion, the most convenient and usable of all Cyclopedias before the public. I deem it an especially valuable work for teachers and for school libraries, and heartily recommend its purchase. N. A. LUCE, State Supt. of Schools, Maine.

A man in the employ of John Frost loaded a lot of bark upon a wagon on Railroad Avenue, last Monday, and started to deliver it. When near the South Reading track his load fell into the street and he had to re-load it. Proceeding up Main street a large lot fell off while near B. F. Stevens'. He finally concluded that the best way was to deliver what was left on the wagon which he did, returning for the rest in a short time.

The picnic of the St. John's Sunday School at Centennial Grove last Thursday, was attended by over three hundred and fifty persons. The sports consisted of a base ball game between the shop nines of Eagan & Kelley and Thos. Carroll, the former winning by a score of 16 to 15. The game was quite exciting and everybody was interested. At 7.15 the party arrived home contented.

PRESENT POWER.

TO-MORROW A LONG WAY OFF WHEN HELP IS WANTED TO DAY.

Comfort is never in a hurry. Pain and distress are in hot haste. It is to the "friend in need"—the friend who does something now—that the old adage pays the compliment of being "a friend indeed." That they do not keep the sufferer in suspense is the salient excellence of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. The plasters of other days—whether porous or otherwise—said—"Wait until to-morrow: We can promise nothing on the spur of the moment." But pain unrelieved, like hope deferred, maketh the heart sick. Benson's plasters act on application. They permeate, soothe, warm and heal, containing, as they do, chemical and medicinal agents of the highest efficiency. Their motto is NOW, and the genuine have the word CAPCINE cut in the middle of each plaster. Price 25 cents. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Letter from Lake George.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—This writing finds us very pleasantly located at Fort William Henry Hotel, Lake George.—We need say nothing of our journey here. To-day the visitor alights at a little Queen Anne depot, a hundred steps distant from the hotel, a tired traveler from a dusty railway carriage, and yet it seems only the other day that the rumbling stage coach, with four lithe limbed animals yoked two abreast, wheeled along under the shadow of the lofty peaks, in and along the rugged passes, then into the open space where the bosom of the lake lay stretched out in the wealth of natural loveliness, to the same spot we now occupy. While Lake George holds out attractions that cannot be equalled, fashion does not flourish here. Once in a while the calm, unruffled life which sojourners lead here is enriched by a magnificent wardrobe, brought hither to adorn the back of some lady unacquainted with the homely proclivities of the old stager guest. Do not misunderstand me—we have nicely dressed people here who are always aware of the proprieties of fashionable existence, but, unlike Saratoga, the choice of dress is untrammeled, and there is so general a liberty of action that one can't help noticing it.—The surroundings here are elaborate, elegant and enchanting. The hotel's broad piazzas command a view of the lake for miles as it sweeps to the northward. So delightful is the prospect visible from this shaded eyrie that there are people who are contented to remain here for weeks without so much as stirring down its steps, and, as to ourselves, we find an irresistible charm holding us on the spacious verandah, and we were surrounded by hundreds like ourselves.

There is another interesting feature: the guests at this hotel seem to be congenial, and one need not stand on ceremony all summer long. So many families are here that it is more like a pleasant neighborhood than a hotel. On the shaven lawn which spreads over the grounds of the Fort William Henry Hotel is a lawn tennis court, where, at all hours of the day, lovers of this captivating pastime may be seen, and in no location can the effect of the pure air of this place be seen to better advantage. Under the brisk excitement of the game and the vigor of the atmosphere plump bosoms swell and damask cheeks glow. Then we have the ascent of Rattlesnake Mountain, or a pull on the lake to Tea Island, and, to lovers of the dance, a gilded ball room, while winsome faces grace the parlors. Merry parties to explore the grim mountains, rising drear and bleak at our back, are made up every day, and trudge up to the summit. But the panorama which unfolds to the eye as you toil upward is sufficient recompense even for making the ascent. To my mind no region east of the Yosemite, save, perhaps, that of the Thousand Islands, brings into one comprehensive picture so many exalted perspectives. The tall and misty peaks of the Adirondacks, the earth showing dimly below, and the lake lying like a jewel in a case, beggars description. It was our luck to witness a storm in the mountains, but words to describe it fail us.—Great thick clouds, as black as ink, rolled, and grumbled as they rolled, until the element would appear to be concentrating over head. Murmurs of thunder seemed minute by minute drawing nearer until, ever and anon, they crack like bursted cannon so far below the hills as to jar the lake like a glass of water held in an unsteady hand.—Flashes of lurid lightning stripe the sky, and followed by thunder, which is buffeted from hillside to hillside until it dies away in successive echoes up and down the lake. The rain beats down in torrents, and lashes the water in bubbles on the pebbled shores.—These storms come and go within an hour, and give a variety and diversity that is truly enjoyable.

Lake George is getting to be more and more in favor of tourists. The hotels here keep pace with their requirements, and, in truth, Lake George is enjoying one of its most prosperous seasons. S.

It is rumored that after the Legislature adjourns Gov. Butler will see what he can do toward removing the members of the board of health, lunacy and charity. We hope he will, by all means. He couldn't devise a better way to help elect Talbot as his successor next fall.—Palmer Journal.

THE LITTLE MODEL REPUBLIC.—Valparaiso, Chili,—Senor Ricardo Stuven, a leading commission merchant of this city, after having exhausted all other remedies has been completely cured of rheumatism by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, the great pain-banisher. He makes this public.

The Fitchburg railroad now runs two fast express trains between Boston and Saratoga springs, leaving Boston at 7:30 A.M. and reaching Saratoga at 3.25 and 10.15 P.M. The beautiful Deerfield valley and the Hoosac tunnel with its "darkness that can be felt" are extra attractions on this route.

MOTHER'S SPINNING WHEEL.

CONCERNING ONE ARTICLE THAT WAS NOT FOR SALE, AND ANOTHER WHICH IS CHEAP AT ANY PRICE.

"No, sir, I wouldn't sell you that for any money; that spinning-wheel was my mother's. It was one day, when she was singing like a lark and making this old wheel hum, that my father, then a young medical student, afterwards a farmer, fell in love with her—some fifty years ago."

So spoke the proprietor of a rough bit of farm land in Ulster County, N. Y., to a relic-hunter, and "mother's" spinning-wheel remained among her children and grandchildren.

"My mother," writes Rev. J. W. Phelps, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. Church, Chicago, has used PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and wishes me to say that she has found it more effective than anything she ever used for invigorating and strengthening the system debilitated by malaria. She desires me also especially to mention the certainty with which it aids digestion and overcomes exhaustion."

Ever since the first household was established "mother's" opinion has been more potent in this world than that of judge, jurist or physician. Her hand has always cooled the fever and her voice has been filled with hope. With each day's decline, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is becoming more deservedly popular with the women who guard alike husband and children. It eradicates malarial poison from the blood, from which there is now such wide spread suffering.

Please observe: DR. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not an essence of ginger. It is a combination of several ingredients, of which none singly can produce anything like its effect. For Kidney, Stomach and Liver troubles, it is the standard and unfailing remedy. In two sizes; 50 cents and $1. The latter the cheaper. Hiscox & Co., Chemists, New York.

There will be 401 votes in the next electoral college, 201 being necessary for a choice. The fifteen States of New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Vermont, Wisconsin and Rhode Island furnish precisely the requisite number. If the republicans can carry all of these they can afford to let the democrats have the other 23, including Indiana, New Jersey, Nevada, Colorado, California, Oregon and Virginia. The only doubtful States in the list of 15 enumerated above are New York and Ohio. If the republicans should lose New York and Ohio, they would have to carry all the States mentioned in the second list, and eight more votes besides, to win.—St. Louis Globe.

HAY FEVER.—I was severely afflicted for eleven years with Hay Fever, after trying almost everything without avail, I gave up all hopes of being cured, when I purchased a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. To my surprise, after a few applications, I was entirely relieved. R. Watson Harris, Letter Carrier, Newark, N. J.

I recommend to those suffering (as I have) with Hay Fever, Ely's Cream Balm. I have tried nearly all the remedies, and give this a decided preference over them all. It has given me immediate relief. C. T. Stephens, Hardware merchant, Ithaca, N. Y. Price 50 cents.

That notorious steamboat excursion during the visit of the continental Guards of New Orleans cost the city of Boston, in round numbers, sixty-nine hundred dollars. Of this amount nearly four thousand dollars were expended for drinks and cigars, and the bills also comprise good-sized items for playing-cards and broken tableware. Nine thousand cigars were distributed and one member of the party is said to have chuckled over his good fortune in obtaining more than a hundred for his own use at some future time.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at Spaulding's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

While visiting the White Mountains last week Mr. P. T. Barnum went to the top of Mount Washington. It was a fine day and the scene was unusually impressive, and the famous showman gazed about, long, in silent admiration. Then he drew a telegraphic blank from his pocket and pencilled this message to a friend: "I am at the top of Mount Washington. It is the second greatest show on earth."

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

"What are the wi'hild waves sa-hay-hay-ing, Si-his-ter, the whole da-a-hay long?"

"That the Summer boarders will be paying Remarkably steep rates for a singularly indifferent article of board and lodging in the course of a few weeks—that brother, so far as I can make out, appears to be the purport of their saw-haw-haw-hong!"—Life.

Damonia, the new remedy advertised in our columns, is a magnetic mineral earth lately discovered in Texas, which a careful analysis of our most prominent chemists declares to contain the most potent medical ingredients. A trial is recommended.

"IT'S A GOOD THING

AND I KNOW IT." WERE THE WORDS OF MR. LEVI PORTER, THE CELEBRATED FASHIONABLE CUTTER TO THE FIRM OF NATHAN & TAYLOR, UNDER THE NARRAGANSETT HOUSE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.—SHOWS WHAT AN HONEST THING WILL DO.

"It's a good thing; I know it's a good thing." Such were the words addressed to your reporter when he called at the fashionable establishment of Nathan & Taylor, under the Narragansett House, Providence, R. I. The speaker was Mr. Leroy Porter, head manager of the tailoring department of this large clothing house, as he was cutting his way through a mammoth pile of brocades, Scotch plaids and broadcloths.

"I felt sometimes as if there was a cannon ball resting on my stomach. I would have to get up at night for I was so short of breath. You see in the Spring—our busy season—we are at work sixteen hours per day. Have short times for meals, and at irregular hours. My stomach became very much disordered, and I was all out of health, I tried every kind of medicines. The doctors said it was a touch of dyspepsia. I could get nothing to do me permanent good until a friend recommended Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. I know it's a good medicine. It has completely cured me of stomach disorders and indigestion. It seems to be a thorough cleanser of the system from biliousness or anything of that kind. I know this for I've tried it. I m in the best of health now, but should I ever have a dyspeptic turn again Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY would be my source of relief. Dr Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY acts upon the digestive organs in a charming manner, regulating their action, strengthening and purifying the whole system."

Ask your druggist for it.

Book Notices.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for August has a variety of articles especially suited to summer reading. The opening illustrated paper, "A Holiday on French Rivers," by Theodore Child, is an account of a boating excursion down the Yonne and the Seine to Rouen. An article which should be not only read but attentively considered is one on "Hydrophobia," by Dr. Charles W. Dulles, who exposes the prevalent misconceptions and exaggerations in regard to the disease. It is hardly necessary to mention Miss Tincker's serial, "The Jewel in the Lotos," though the present installment will be likely to excite a flutter among Roman Catholic readers. Among the short papers in the "Monthly Gossip," an account of the "Economites," a flourishing community in Western Pennsylvania, deserves particular notice.

The NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW for August opens with a very spirited discussion of the subject of "Moral Instruction in the Public Schools," by the Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton, and the Rev. Dr. Francis L. Patton. Henry D. Lloyd exposes the tricks and frauds of speculation in grain. "Woman in Politics," by ex-Surgeon-General Wm. A. Hammond, is a caustic discussion of certain facts of nervous organization in the female sex. Hon. Francis A. Walker reviews "Henry George's Social Fallacies." The evils resulting from "Crude Methods of Legislation," both national and State, are pointed out by Simon Sterne. Charles F. Wingate writes of "The Unsanitary Homes of the Rich," and there is a joint discussion of Science and Prayer, by President Galusha Anderson and Thaddeus B. Wakeman. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, and for sale by booksellers generally.

The August number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly is remarkable for the variety and excellence of the contents. Among the leading articles are, "The Home of Illustrated Literature" (a description of the Frank Leslie establishment); "The History of a playhouse," by Henry Tyrrell; "The Real Lord Byron," by Alfred H. Guernsey, etc., etc. The interesting serial "The Beautiful Countess of Clairville," is continued, and there are delightful stories, sketches, etc. The number contains 128 pages quarto, over 100 illustrations and a beautiful colored frontispiece, "A Declaration of Love." The price is only 25 cents a number; $3 a year, postpaid. Address, Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55, and 57 Park Place, New York.

The August number of Harper's is brilliant and picturesque. People who cannot go to sea will read the article on the "Modern Yacht," whose author is Lieutenant Kelly of the navy, with a vague hopefulness that their yachting days are coming. A seasonable article, too, is the sketch of American horses, with pictures of the more famous animals. A careful study of the Canadian habitant, a subject peculiarly fascinating and fruitful, is contributed by Mr. C. H. Farnham. Mr. George Parsons Lathrop writes of "The Heart of the Alleghanies," and there are articles by Higginson, T. B. Aldrich, Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford and others, and the work in the several departments is fresh and strong.

The August Atlantic contains two chapters of Mr. Crawford's new serial, "A Roman Singer," and three chapters of Mr. Lathrop's "Newport" serial. There is an interesting paper by Rev. Brooks Herford. Henry James writes the second of a series of papers on French country scenery. A travel sketch by Charles Dudley Warner, and others. The number contains poems by Mrs. Piatt, Grace Denio Litchfield, and Charles F. Lummis; reviews of several important new works; and the usual collection of bright, brief essays in the Contributors' Club,—the whole making a remarkably good summer number of the Atlantic. HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

ST. NICHOLAS for August is emphatically a holiday number, containing sea stories, papers on fishing and a fine story by Kate Tannatt Woods. It is a number calculated to take its readers away from the great cities to the mountains and sea-side, and will be eagerly and profitably sought for.

Peterson's Magazine is replete with summer fashions and reading matter of interest. Ladies will find the August number an excellent one. It is the favorite of its class.

First Assistant Postmaster General Hatton grieves because the two cent postal law is a mistake. If it was a hundredth part as much of a mistake as Hatton himself, 'twould indeed be lamentable.—Milford Journal.

At a meeting of the prohibitory state committee it was voted to hold a state convention in Boston on the third Wednesday in September. Mr. C. A. Hovey, the secretary, presented his resignation, which was accepted after a vote of thanks for his faithful service.

The Nurse Family Reunion.

Seldom does the lapse of years bring about a greater reverse of popular judgment, than in the case of Rebecca Nurse of Danvers, then Salem village, who unjustly accused, impartially tried and cruelly punished, is now recognized to have been a patient, heroic soul, whose virtues are deserving of commemoration by all who desire to see justice done, even though it be tardily bestowed. Rebecca Nurse was one of the innocent victims of the Salem witchcraft craze, and it is no injustice to the others to say that none of them exhibited grander qualities when tried, than she. She had lived a long and blameless life, was well known and respected for her social and domestic qualities, was a faithful member of the First Church, had well brought up her family of four sons and four daughters and was in every way wholly undeserving the persecution to which she was subjected. On the 24th of March, 1692 she was ruthlessly torn from her peaceful home and happy family, on the charge of being a witch; her accusers being Edward and Thomas Putnam. In the following June, her trial took place. Deaf, old and infirm she could not give satisfactory answers to those already resolved on her destruction. And yet the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty. The Judge readvised them and the people clamored so that they reversed their decision and pronounced her guilty, and condemned her to die. Her aged form heavily loaded with irons, was led up the broad aisle of the church where she had so often worshipped and she was formally excommunicated from the church and her soul declared the property of the evil one. On the 19th of July, she and four other condemned women were taken from the common jail, and carried to execution. Twenty strong men surrounded the cart to keep the poor, weak women from escaping. They were carried to Gallows Hill and hanged by the neck until dead.

Her sons went at dead of night, stole away the body, bore it tenderly across the fields towards her late home, and stealthily gave it a resting place in the family burying ground a few rods from the house. The exact location of her grave has never been determined.

The old house where she lived stands to-day, somewhat changed indeed, but practically the same as it was two hundred years ago. It stood then in the center of a large farm of three hundred acres originally granted by the town of Salem to Townsend Bishop. There are fifty acres on the present estate belonging to Orrin Putnam, a descendant of Rebecca's persecutors, and a worthy gentleman who married a Nurse a direct descendant of Rebecca. For some years it has been thought desirable by the family and its connections that a suitable testimonial should be erected near the spot where her remains were buried, and 1876 the Nourse Monument Association was formed. (The present members of the family spell the name as just given). Among the list of officers was Sylvanus L. Newhall of this town, Recording Secretary, whose mother was one of the descendants. On Wednesday last, a gathering of the family was held at the old homestead, and a large company assembled, coming from Worcester, Philadelphia, Woonsocket, R. I., Leominster and other places. Among those present were Mr. S. L. Newhall and Mr. S. F. Reed and family of Peabody. The Needhams and Newhalls of this town are directly connected with the family. Mr. Reed's wife was a Nurse and her father was born in the old house. Dinner was served out doors under the large trees in the rear of the house and when through, an hour or more was passed in socialities and in examining the house; our friend Reed just fitted into the kitchen which is very low studded, his head when standing erect touching the ceiling. The room from whence Rebecca was taken has been made into two rooms, but despite its change was the mecca of many eager visitors. About two o'clock, Aaron Nourse of Salem called the assembly to order, and introduced B. B. Nourse, of Westboro, who presided. An interesting account of the trial was read by Miss Kate Nourse, of Salem. Rev. Mr. Rice, of Danvers, spoke pleasantly and remarks were made by members of the family. W. P. Upham, son of the historian, gave an account of the estate, showing how it passed from one to another until it became the property of its present owner. Before separating, the company was photographed with the house. It was determined to meet again July 19, 1884, on the same spot, and all present were made a committee to collect funds towards a suitable monument. It would seem that there ought to be public spirit enough to ensure funds sufficient to erect before long a handsome and appropriate memorial to one so worthily historical, and if the members of the family are not too modest in pressing the matter as we trust they will not be, we believe it will be done.

The Point of Pines has done a large business for the past few weeks and it is not to be wondered at considering the attractions offered by Manager Thayer. This week a great attraction will be Parks, the tight-rope wonder of the world, who will perform the unparalleled feat of walking a wire from the roof of the Hotel Goodwood to the top of the Hotel Pines. This most dangerous and wonderful Blondin-like feat will take place in the afternoon at 4 o'clock, and in the evening Mr. Parks will also attempt with the aid of electric and calcium lights, to give a display of fireworks, on the tight-rope, while at a perilous height in the middle of the wire. The concerts given daily by Arbuckle's band are the finest in the world, and the restaurants and cafes furnish refreshments at a moderate price. There is no advance in price of excursion tickets thither, despite rumors to the contrary. On the Eastern R. R. from Peabody, the price of a round trip ticket is 60 cents, the same as last year, and to those who prefer going to Lynn, on the horse railroad, and connect with the Revere Beach, the fare from Lynn and return is 30 cts. These prices include admission to the grounds, and are no advance from last year. Considering the attractions and expense, which must attend such fine music, we think the price is very reasonable.

The Skating Rink at the Willows, with the improvements which we noted at the beginning of the season, is meeting with much sucess. The facilities for seating to enjoy an exhibition of fancy skating, or a game of polo, which is frequently given, are greatly appreciated. Mr. H. E. Reed, the efficient manager, is doing everything for the enjoyment of the patrons of the rink, and to-morrow evening a Grand Fancy Dress and Costume party will be given. Curtis & Weld, the costumers of Boston, will be at the rink during the day and will be prepared to let costumes at very low prices. Prizes will be offered for the best costumes, for which well known Salem people will be judges. There will be no advance in price of admission for that evening, but no one not in costume will be allowed to skate. It will be the event of the season, and the horse cars will run to Peabody at the close. See advertisement in another column.

Twenty four people from one horse car we noted being transferred from Peabody to Lynn beach one day last week. And those of our people who have occasion to patronize the Nahant House, the new hotel there, are more than satisfied. Free transfers are given at the Eastern R. R. depot in Lynn to this beach, by the horse railroad company. No checks are given for any transfers on this line, but the passengers who wish to be transferred, will mention the fact to the conductor, who will transfer them at this station only.

The Willows Pavilion dining hall is under new management this season. The dining hall is down stairs, convenient of access, and everything is served in the best style. The manager is W. P. Davis, a man of long experience in the hotel business, of Jacksonville, Fla. Fish dinners, including ice cream and fruit are served for 50 cents, while the menu on the European plan comprises steaks, chicken, and other tempting delicacies. We desire our readers particularly to note that Mr. Davis, the proprietor, is not Mr. Davis, under whose management the Pavilion was conducted last year, and we cordially invite our readers to give the Pavilion a trial.

Mr. Arthur T. Dodge has a new sign calling attention to his business.

In these days of books when so many varieties are presented to the people, all must make a distinction. We buy histories and biographies, read them, set them aside, and then they are of no practical value. People in all stations of life need a book for reference, but heretofore Cyclopedias have always been so high in price, and cumbrous in form, that only the wealthiest felt justified in buying, but we now have presented to us a Cyclopedia that has been compiled by our greatest educators, expressly for all people, within the reach of all, neither partial, cumbrous or expensive, so low in price that the mere pittance of five cents a day, for a single year, will provide an amount sufficient to purchase the entire work. A few minutes devoted to the examination of this great work, may be profitably employed, whether a purchase is made or not. The agent, Adelbert E. Cady, for the People's Cyclopedia of Universal Knowledge, will be in town a few weeks and will be pleased to show the work at his office at Mrs. C. F. Wiley's, next to Universalist church, on the right. Office hours from 7 to 9 A.M., 11.30 to 1.30 and 5.30 to 6.30, or at your home or office at any specified time.

The removal of William A. Crafts, the efficient clerk of the railroad commissioners, is a good illustration of the doctrine "to the victors belong the spoils." Mr. Litchman, the appointee, editor of the Marblehead Statesman, will make a good clerk, but there was no reason for the change, save to find a place for a Butler man.

"Prof." Stevens, a well known character, who formerly resided here, is visiting in town.

A Lynn gentleman, wishing to visit Lowell Island, called at our office to learn the proper way to reach it. We suggested that visitors usually swim across from Marblehead, but he was skeptical. After searching four Salem papers he gave up his task, seemingly convinced that we were right. Sometimes it pays people to advertise.—Item.

The Board of Education of Brooklyn, N. Y., adopted the People's Cyclopedia, published by Phillips & Hunt, by a unanimous vote, for use in the public schools of the city. The publishers of this work are now printing the fiftieth thousand. They sold over three thousand sets last month—an unprecedented sale for so large a work.

THOSE WHO USE IT, SAY

No subject of importance has been neglected in the People's Cyclopedia.—Portland (Me.) Press.

I use The People's Cyclopedia constantly. I should take it in preference to any other popular work. Z. A. SMITH, of Editorial Staff of Boston Journal.

I have formed a very high opinion of The People's Cyclopedia, based upon knowledge derived from daily use. THOS. DREW, Literary Ed. Boston Herald.

Before examining The People's Cyclopedia, I could not conceive how so good a work could be made. I can not now imagine how a better one can be made. S. W. MASON, LL. D., Supervisor Schools, Boston.

I deem it an admirable work. It covers the field of knowledge effectively, and gives just that information which all want. In short, it is just the book for reading, thinking Americans. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Brooklyn.

I have given an examination to The People's Cyclopedia, and find that it answers what I believe to be the want of a work of that class. I can recommend it for the office and for the use of the business men of the country. BENJ. F. BUTLER Gov.

When I had finished a careful examination of The People's Cyclopedia, I decided to purchase it, although I already possessed the Britannica, American and Johnson's Universal. Each of these great works has merits peculiarly its own, but it may, in my judgment, be truly said of The People's, that it furnishes more information for the money than any work extant. Col. JOHN D. WASHBURN, Worcester, Mass.

A valuable book for practical use. It is full of things which we want to know but cannot readily get access to. J. W. PATTERSON, Ex-U. S. Senator and Supt. Pub. Schools, N. H.

I am especially pleased with its freshness and accuracy, its brevity and clearness of statement, and at the same time its fulness and completeness, making it, in my opinion, the most convenient and usable of all Cyclopedias before the public. I deem it an especially valuable work for teachers and for school libraries, and heartily recommend its purchase. N. A. LUCE, State Supt. of Schools, Maine.

Cast Thy Bread Upon The Waters.

Cast thy bread upon the waters, ye who have abundant store;
It may float on many billows; it may strand on many a shore;
You may think it lost forever, but as sure
as God is true,
In this life or in the other, it will yet return to you.

Cast thy bread upon the waters, ye who have a scant supply;
Angel eyes will watch above it; you shall find it bye and bye;
He who in His righteous balance doth each human action weigh Will your sacrifice remember, will your loving deed repay.

Cast thy bread upon the waters, poor and weary, worn with care,
Often sitting in the shadows, have you not a crumb to spare?
Can you not, to those around you, sing
some little song of hope?
While you look, with longing vision, through faith's mighty telescope?

Cast thy bread upon the waters; far and wide your treasure strew;
Scatter it with willing fingers; laugh for joy to see it go;
For if you too closely keep it, it will only drag you down;
If you love it more than Jesus, it will keep you from your crown.

Cast thy bread upon the waters, waft it on with prayerful breath;
In some distant, doubtful moment, it may save a soul from death;
Or when you shall sleep in silence, 'neath
the morn and evening dew,
Stronger hands that you have strengthened, may strew lilies over you.

The Cycles of Paradise.

BY LYMAN WHITNEY ALLEN.

The stars shine out on the wide, wide sea,
With a light that is ne'er forgot;
But your eyes, sweetheart, shine out to me
With a light that the stars know not.

The larks sing soft in the fresh green grass,
Their heaven-taught melody;
But the birds are dumb as your sweet words pass
Swift-winged as the light to me.

The rose climbs up to my window seat,
And faints in its rich perfume;
But the breath of your lips is sweeter,
my sweet,
And their crimson is love's ripe bloom.

Oh, lips that were fashioned for kissing mine,
That whisper in love's low tone!
Oh, eyes that out of love's vast deeps shine!
Sweetheart of my heart, mine own!

You have feasted me, love, as the rose the bee,
On the sweets of your lips and eyes;
You have opened love's portals and given to me,
The cycles of Paradise.

My Gift.

BY LYDIA DAVIS THOMSON.

Deep hidden in my thankful heart,
Yielding its richness hour by hour,
There blooms a pure and priceless flower
That grows to be of me a part;
And blooming ever night and day
It cheers me on life's lonely way.

No art can trace its beauty fair,
No piercing eye its form can see
Growing in silence there for me;
But whosoever will may share
The fragrance that my floweret yields,
And me from every evil shields.

It lights me o'er life's devious road,
At morn and eve and noon and night;
If days are dark or days are bright;
But when I bear the heaviest load
Then most its potency I feel,
Its hallowed influence o'er me steal.

Its leaves send forth a soothing power,
To cheer the downcast and the sad
And make the glad to be more glad,—
And so with every changing hour
Some light, or life, or comfort gives,
And giving ever, ever lives.

And while I keep my floweret bright,
And guard it with a watchful eye,
I fear no evil coming nigh
Its sacred precious bloom to blight;
And on my path its light will shine,
For 't is the gift of Love Divine.

Selected Story.

Summer Boarders.

"Now, Zeke Taylor, me'n you's ben a slavin' an' a pinchin' for nigh onto twenty years, an' let's take it easy this summer. Cousin Marthy says we can take boarders, an' jest coin money. What d'ye say?"

Zeke Taylor rubbed his ruddy face thoughtfully. "It kinder 'pears to me, Hannah, that we might take it easy like, 'thout bringin' strangers into the house. Don't you think so, Betty?" he continued, turning to a rosy-cheeked girl of seventeen or eighteen, who was basily washing the dishes.

"I guess we could, father," she returned, laughing at the rueful face he put on when her mother proposed summer boarders.

"Zekiel," said the helpmeet of that individual somewhat sternly, "how often have I got to tell you to call her Bessie, an' not Betty?"

"'Twas my mother's name," rejoined Ezekiel meekly; "an' I always thought as how 'twas good enough fer my darter. But I'll try."

"An' Zekiel, I want you to try an' put on some kind o' style. Grease y'r hair an' keep it combed, an' ile y'r boots oftener. I don't 'spose," she continued dubiously, eyeing him very much as a person might an inferior animal that he had purchased and scarcely knew what to do with, "that you could be persuaded to shave y'r scraggly whiskers an' wear a mustacher?"

"Oh, Lordy, don't!" ejaculated the man of the house, depreciatingly, running his hands through the obnoxious hirsute appendage; "wouldn't I look like a picked owl without my whiskers?"

There was a look of genuine agony upon the rugged face that brought tears to the eyes of the loving daughter, though they might be tears of laughter, for she nearly suffocated with merriment.

"Never mind, father," she said, coming over to where he sat disconsolately, and patting him upon the head in a protecting manner, "you shan't lose your pretty beard," albeit the before-mentioned beard resembled very much a wisp of bleached hay.

"But that's not the point," continued Mrs. Taylor, not at all pleased by her daughter's levity, "what I want is to hev some city folks stop here fer the summer. We'd make a good thing out of it, an' Bessie'd hev a chance to larn somethin'. Will ye do it?"

"Will I do it?" repeated Mr. Taylor, with the faintest possible of sarcasm in his tone, "did ye ever know me to stand out agin ye, mother?"

And so it was settled that Mrs. Taylor should take boarders for the summer, and Bessie was to mingle with them and try and absorb some of the superabundant style and polish which city folks exhale like the fragrance of sweet flowers.

"An' Bessie, I want ye to tell Hi Simpson not to be hangin' round all the time when the folks are here," admonished Mrs. Taylor, and Bessie, with flushed face and downcast eyes promised to have her rustic admirer keep his distance.

'P'r'aps, Zekiel, whispered Mrs. Taylor confidentially, 'Bessie may captivate some city chap,' but her liege lord shook his head, and muttered, 'Lord forbid.'

An advertisement in a city paper brought at least a score of applications, and the good housewife puzzled her brains over the different missives for at least half a day before she decided to respond favorably to a quartette, composed of two young ladies and an equal number of young gentlemen, who longed for the freedom of the country and were willing to take things as they found them.

'Now, Zekiel, you must put on y'r best manners an' not make a fool of yourself,' said the tender wife, as the farmer started to meet the expected guests. 'They will be all rigged out to kill.'

As Zekiel Taylor stood upon the platform at the village station and watched the train move slowly in and stop, his honest heart was filled with a nameless dread and awe, he knew not why, which did not lessen as the passengers began to jostle each other upon the platform. He looked about him, but failed to discover his guests.

'Can you tell me if Mr. Taylor is here anywhere?' asked a musical voice at his elbow, which roused him to a realization of things material, and he looked around to encounter a pair of bright eyes set in a laughing face, the owner of which was encased in a travelling rig of brown linen.

'Wall, yes, I 'spose I am the man,' answered the farmer, somewhat reassured by the plain dress of his questioner.

'Herbert, Nell, Will, come here,' called the brown-clad damsel, turning to a trio of equally simply attired young people, 'here's our host.'

'Be you the city people,' queried Zekiel in wide-mouthed amazement.

'Lordy,' he continued, slapping his knee and laughing, 'won't the old lady stare? She made me git on all these store clothes, an' she's rigged out, well,' and he drew a long breath, as though it were fairly impossible to describe her gorgeousness. 'But I'm terrible glad ye haint finified out,' he went on, as he handed them into his big spring wagon and strapped the trunks on behind.

He drove the horses with a light heart. The bugbear that had tormented him for months past seemed to have vanished, though an uncertain expression rested upon his face as he drew rein at the farmhouse door.

The spectacle that greeted the eyes of the young people as they alighted was rather overpowering. The lady of the house had attired herself in raiment to correspond with the dignity of the new arrivals. Her rotund form was arrayed in a rustling dress of brocade silk trimmed with satin and velvet in a manner to give one the impression of a lay figure in a dry goods emporium, while a heavy gold chain dangled from her neck, and various costly gew-gaws were disposed about her person, for the Taylors were forehanded people, and as the neighbors said, "hed heaps o' money."

It was hard for the mistress of the household to realize that these were the long-expected guests for whom such preparations had been made, but she maintained her dignity and delivered the little speech which had been prepared for the occasion.

"I'm glad y've come, an' we'll try and make ye as comfortable as possible," and she reached out her hand rather more patronizingly than deferentially; "an' this is my daughter, Bessie," she continued, presenting the blushing girl with a conscious pride in the latter's good looks.

"A perfect wild flower," whispered Will Thorn to his brother Herbert, and they made their way to their rooms, leaving Mrs. Taylor with a rather self-satisfied feeling as to her own personal advantages over her city guests in the matter of appearance.

"Zeke Taylor," she said to her husband, after he had managed to transport the heavy trunks to their respective locations, "they didn't hev nothin' on but linen. Only think, brown linen!"

"Hold on a while, Hannah; them air trunks was mighty hefty," and he walked away shaking his head, while his spouse viewed herself in the parlor mirror with a satisfying amount of self-complacency.

But the matron's self-gratulation was of short duration. Her guests took possession of the entire premises in the shortest possible space of time. If country people were hoodenish, they were doubly so. The confinement of brick and stone walls and hard pavements had rendered them exceedingly susceptible to the freedom of country life.

The young men were exceedingly attentive to Bessie Taylor and the other rustic belles, much to the annoyance of Hiram Simpson and the beaux of the neighborhood, while the young ladies flirted with the best looking youth of the region, and even smiled upon the young minister, which greatly scandalized certain members of the congregation, though the object of the smiles did not seem at all averse to making the acquaintance of the bewitching damsels, who dressed in charming taste and had evidently moved in the best society.

One day the minister's gold watch turned up missing, and the next Sunday his sermon was tinged with a certain shade of melancholy; and shortly after one of the village stores was broken open and a quantity of money and valuables abstracted, and then Mrs. Taylor's neck chain becoming one of the things that were, the summer boarders being also among the sufferers.

The Thornes had engaged board for three months, yet scarcely half that time had elapsed ere a family council was held in the most private room of the Taylor homestead.

"Zeke Taylor, this 'ere boardin' business hain't what it's cracked up to be. Here I've ben a slave for six weeks. They want this, an' they want that, an' it's run this way an' that way, till I'm all tuckered out. What air we going to do?" and Mrs. Taylor, for once in her life, looked a picture of helpless despair.

"Well, Hannah, ef ye'd tuk my advice"—began Ezekiel, but his weaker half interposed:—

"There haint no ifs about it. We've got to take the matter jest as it stands. I can't stand it six weeks longer. I shell be in a lunatic asylum."

It was with exceeding great joy and thankfulness that Ezekiel Taylor assembled his guests together and informed them that they must seek other if not greener pastures. In vain they protested that their term of residence had only half expired.

"Ye can't stay no longer," he said, firmly. "What ye hev staid shan't cost ye nothin', but ye've got to git."

So they packed their trunks and prepared to return to their native curb and cobble stones; greatly to the delight of Bessie and Hiram Simpson, whose billing and cooing had been sadly interfered with, though the young minister could not forget the bewitching smiles which had served to brighten his somewhat monotonous life.

He attended them to the depot and stood talking, while waiting for the train.

"I shall miss you very much," he said: "and I am sorry you have decided to leave us," for the cause of their departure had been kept secret.

"I hope you may recover your watch," returned the younger Miss Thorne, with one of the bewitching smiles that had so turned the head of the young pastor.

"Yes," he answered nervously; "it was a present from my father when I graduated, and my salary is so meagre that I shall scarcely be able to replace it. But I shall miss you more than the watch," and his somewhat weak face became more than usually expressive.

Just then a couple of stout, hard featured men, whom the minister recognized as a deputy sheriff and constable, approached the group.

"This is the Thorne family, I believe," said one of the men gruffly, tapping Herbert upon the shoulder.

The two young men turned pale and the minister fidgeted, while just behind the officers stood Zekiel Taylor, a queer expression upon his face. But Julia Thorne, the younger, was nowise abashed.

"Yes, sir, that is our name, at your service," she said, a strange sparkle in her bright eyes, that caused the young minister's heart to thrill with admiration, but the bluff officer was not in the least disconcerted.

"Well, miss, I've got a dockment to serve on ye," and he drew forth a warrant. "And I guess I'll take a look into these trunks. Give us the keys."

Vainly the girls and even the minister protested, though Herbert and William stood with white faces and speechless lips, as the trunks one by one were opened. Nearly all the missing things were found, the minister's watch, Mrs. Taylor's chain, and various articles of jewelry coming to light.

"I'd rather never found the watch," said the young parson mournfully, but Julia retorted sharply:—

"You are a fool. Any one could steal your eye-teeth by making a little of you," and the flush that dyed the cheek of the reverend gentleman showed that he was somewhat disenchanted.

It turned out that the Thornes' detection was due to Hiram Simpson, who in his lonely wanderings near the forbidden premises, had seen and heard enough to arouse his suspicions, and Betty is again permitted to smile upon his suit.

If any one wishes to see an impromptu flash of lightning, it is only necessary to ask Mrs. Taylor if she intends taking summer boarders. —Portland Transcript.

The Thoughtful Contributor.

'I want to write for your paper,' said a solemn-looking man, as he paused on the threshold of the editorial sanctum.

'That's right,' replied the editor, without looking up from his work, for it was publication day and there was a great demand for copy that could not be denied. 'When you write for it be particular and give your name and post office address distinctly.'

'I will,' said the solemn man, stepping in and taking a chair.

'And don't forget to inclose the money. Some folks write for the paper and forget to put in any money. Then they complain because the paper doesn't come.'

'Do you require money when a man writes for your paper?' asked the solemn man, as his face acquired an additional elongation.

'Of course. What d'ye think we print a paper for? Fun? Not much. If a man writes for the paper we suppose he wants it, and if he wants it, why he must pay for it.'

'You don't understand, sir,' said the solemn man; 'what I want is to write for your paper.'

'That's what you said before, and I told you how to do it,' replied the editor, testily, swinging around in his chair. 'Though I can't see why you can't subscribe right here just as well's to wait until you get home and then write for it. Though maybe you haven't got the necessary two dollars with you. I respect your independence. You do not want to subscribe for a paper you are not prepared to pay for. That is all right.'

'But if I write for it—'

'If you write for it and inclose the money it will be sent promptly. No fear of that. Subscribers will confer a favor on this office by reporting any carelessness or irregularity on the part of their postmaster in delivering their paper.'

'I can put a great deal in a letter,' insinuated the solemn man.

'Needn't put more than two dollars in, unless you get up a club. Usual reduction to clubs.'

'I fear you don't understand me,' said the man of the solemn visage. 'I want to write for your paper—write articles and correspondence, you know, for a remuneration.'

'Oh, that's it. Why didn't you say so before? Thought you wanted to subscribe. Seemed sort o' curious, too, that you could not write for my paper to be sent to you without your coming in and telling about it.'

'You'll like my letters.'

'Can't say as to that. The most interesting letters the editor gets, as a rule, are those short, pithy ones, which simply say, 'Inclosed please find subscription price to your valuable paper for one year.' That outweighs a dozen pages of 'Reflections on the Dying Year,' or 'Thoughts on Discovering the First June Bug.' A great many people want to write for the paper who have nothing half so interesting to say as that they find their subscription has about expired and here is the money for renewing it. That is neat and to the point, and no editor will throw the letter into the waste basket—without first taking out the money and duly crediting the subscriber on his account. Write for the paper, by all means, but don't forget the inclosure.'

Then the solemn man went away more thoughtful than before.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

AN ABUSED TRAVELER. — "Mr. Scott," said the head of the firm to one of the drummers who had just reached home, "what is this I see in the papers about you having five wives?"

"Is it in the papers?"

"Yes, sir; and marked copies have been sent to our firm."

"Well, there's a mistake somewhere, or else it's a put up job to throw me out of a place."

"But have you five wives?"

"No, of course not!"

"Then you had better sue for damages. I'll give you the address of our lawyer, and you can call upon him this afternoon. There is no mistake, you say?"

"Mistake! Can you make five wives out of one wife in Jersey, a cousin in Albany, a sister-in-law in Troy, and a widow who is mashed on me in Syracuse? I'm an innocent and an abused man, and it will take a million dollars to satisfy my injuries."—Syracuse Journal.

The opposition to Butler has got a desperate fight on hand, but if the republican party does work meet for repentance in its annual convention, the issue will be certain. The people of Massachusetts are not ready to turn backward the wheels of time and reestablish a stalwart spoils system. Butlerism must go,—from both parties. That is the issue and the necessity of the situation.—Springfield Republican.

The Suttons of North Andover.

THEIR EARLY HISTORY, MILLS, RESIDENCE AND OTHER MATTERS.

Near the junction of the Cochichawick and Merrimack rivers, in North Andover, stands the stately structure known as Sutton's mills. As a manufacturing establishment it is an architectural model, and its products have acquired a reputation which has kept it in continual operation while other similar institutions have had to suffer from occasional fits of depression. It covers a large area of ground, and at present gives employment to over 140 people.—While the capacity of the works may be comparatively unknown to the general public, the name and merits of its proprietor, Gen. Eben Sutton, are as familiar throughout New England as household words. Learning that this thrifty establishment and its owner had a history that would bear repetition, and prove both interesting and instructive, a representative of the Eagle called upon the general at his office with the object of obtaining whatever information upon the subject designated he would be pleased to communicate. Much as Gen. Sutton had been credited with taste, one could hardly expect to see it so prominently displayed as was presented in the little edifice which contains his business and private offices. The building is outwardly and inwardly a copy of the purest Gothic architecture, the small stained glass windows especially recalling vividly the representations which have been seen of structures belonging to the age of Queen Anne. Gen. Sutton was found at his desk in his shirt sleeves, and with a pleasant smile which gave assurance that his mission would not be in vain, he invited the scribe to be seated.

"I have called," said the reporter, "to obtain something of the history of your family, which I am led to believe is not void of interest."

The general leaned leisurely back in his chair and the reporter was made to feel entirely at home. Having been informed that an unpretentious one-story building in the vicinity of the main mill and now the property of the general was the first in which woolen goods had been manufactured in this part of New England, the question was asked whether such a statement was true. The general replied that such was the case. It was erected towards the close of the last century by two brothers named Schofield. They were the first to introduce and improve upon the carding machine, and first made woolen cloth in this country by the improved carding process. The diminutive establishment passed through several hands until by foreclosure of a mortgage held by his grandfather, Wm. Sutton, it came into the latter's possession. The increase of business necessitated the erection of a larger structure near the mill gate, which was superseded by a still more capacious wooden building that in turn was converted into a store room upon the completion of the present brick edifice. A singular circumstance connected with these changes is that from the original ownership of the property a member of the family through four generations had erected one of the series of mills that supplanted each other in obedience to the inexorable laws of expansion and progress. To show the antiquity and commercial standing away back, of the family in town, the general stated that one of his ancestors, Richard Sutton, maintained a manufactory as early as 1659. He was the first man in No. Andover to grant a deed of land to Gov. Bradstreet which was made in 1658, and is the first on record in this part of the state. The family have in their possession records of their leading members with their genealogical descent from Richard Sutton's time to the present, with the exception of ten years, the history of which was destroyed by fire in Boston. Since his grandfather's time, lineal descendants have consecutively held the position of president of the First National Bank of Salem, the general at present filling the office.

Gen. Eben Sutton was born at Salem forty-seven years ago, but his appearance would not indicate so near an approach to the half century of life. He passed through the high and Latin schools with honor, and subsequently went to New York, where he became the senior member of the firm of Sutton, Smith & Co., dry goods commission merchants, whose principal business was selling the products of the Sutton and other woolen mills. The Andover mills were then owned by his father, Gen. William Sutton, and his uncle, Eben Sutton, the latter also possessing four-fifths of the proprietorship of the Duck bridge when toll was exacted for crossing it, besides being a heavy share holder in the Pemberton corporation. Upon the death of the uncle, at 61 years of age, in 1864, Gen. Eben Sutton was recalled from New York and absolute control of the corporation placed in his hands. From that time forward, the mills have experienced nothing but growing success. This establishment manufactures only the finer quality of flannels, for which about 450,000 pounds of wool are used per annum, the works being under the direct superintendence of the general's son, Mr. John H. Sutton.

Gen. Sutton is also the proprietor of the North Andover mills, another large brick building situated further up the Cochichawick. It was projected in 1839 by a company consisting of Mr. Eben Sutton, Dr. Joseph Kittredge and Capt. George Hodges. After the death of Dr. Kittredge in 1847, Mr. Sutton bought out all others interested in the corporation, and in turn it passed into the possession of General Sutton. The old mill was destroyed by fire in 1872, and the present handsome structure erected upon its site by its present proprietor. The mill employs about 120 hands, is operated under the management of Mr. John Elliott, whose father for a long series of years was superintendent of the Sutton mill, and in the manufacture of flannel exhausts over 300,000 pounds of wool per year.

Gen. Sutton's popularity in North Andover, where he owns 1000 acres of land, is well known. He takes the liveliest interest in the welfare of the community, and there is no scheme or project looking to the furtherance of the town's interests that ever fails to find in him a substantial supporter, while it is said his private charities are unbounded. He gave material assistance to the creation of the fire engine company which bears his name, aided handsomely in the erection of the edifice which serves as a place of Catholic worship, and was mainly instrumental in raising the handsome and grotesque Episcopalian church, which adds such an attractive ornament to the village.—A further and more elaborate example of the general's culture and taste is furnished in the imposing residence which he has erected on Crest hill, near No. Andover Center, and its surroundings. The building looks like some lordly manor of the middle ages, so unique and yet so handsome are its form and carvings. It is painted a crimson red, with dark trimmings, its two stories being surmounted by a tower from which a view of the country can be had into Maine and New Hampshire. The White and Green Mountains are fairly outlined on a clear day, and, with the use of glasses, vessels off Newburyport are easily discernable. Contiguous to the house the general has erected a building which is to be fitted up as a bowling alley on one side and a billiard hall upon the other. Between these apartments an anciently patterned fireplace, in the form of a horseshoe, is built of the finest pressed brick, which tapers upwards and ends in a chimney several feet above the roof. This building, it is said, will cost about $4000. Ground has been broken in another part of the domain, near Mr. Frothingham's house, for the erection of an imposing dwelling for his son, John H. Sutton, which, when completed, will cost nearly $20,000. This is intended as a gift of the father in return for the success with which the son has filled the office of superintendent of his mills. The grounds, which cover 150 acres, are handsomely laid out, exhibits of floriculture meeting the eye in every direction. An artificial lake occupies a prominent place in the landscape, which, in every way it is viewed, is one wherein art and nature formed a union to present themselves in their most seductive and enchanting form.

WHAT OUR BOY SAYS.

He would like a vacation.

He would like as soft a job as the telegraph messenger boy at this station has at the present time.

He wants the postmaster to put a chain outside the post-office for the use of his lady friends when they go to the office with a baby carriage.

There has been a regular crank in town, and has been noticed by people near the new town hall very frequently. It was an iron one used in hoisting stones.

He saw in a paper that a railway clerk had been lucky enough to yank a $100,000 heiress from the cruel waves at Long Branch.

He hasn't heard that she has given him her hand yet, but has ordered for him a gold watch that has two hands.

That he should like to hear a band concert on the square. He says he also remembers help smashing the old band stand when he went to the high school.

He would like to see the temperance people furnish ice water tanks for the public as they do in Brockton.

That if they will do that he won't drink any more gin-ger ale.

That theatre goers to our new town hall won't have to go out for cloves because the "cloves" will be too far off.

That he knows how much beer is drank in town by the amount that comes in on the cars.

That sixty barrels a week don't cover it.

Large assortment of fine Satin Fans, plain and decorated. Feathered fans in all colors, and richest designs for weddings, parties, and the seashore. Smith & Robinson, 42 Market St., Lynn.

How She Fixed it.

"Oh, mamma dear,
I can't stay here,"
The charming daughter cried;
"It is so hot
In this town lot,
That I'll be roasted, if not fried."

"But, daughter dear,
You must stay here,
For papa hasn't cash
To pay the bills
For tucks and frills,
To cut a seaside dash."

She thought awhile
And with a smile,
She said, "I've got a plan
To pay the bills
For tucks and frills,
And also drive a span."

SEQUEL.

What think you, friends, that she could do,
To gain her points and go all Summer?
Her little scheme is soon seen through—
She married? Yes, she married a plumber.

Another Bad Scrape.

"Hello," said the grocery man to the bad boy, as he came in looking sick at heart and all broke up. "How is your uncle this morning?"

"All right enough," said the boy, with a look of inquiry, as though wondering what was coming next. "Why?"

"O, nothing, only I was going to grind the hatchet, and some knives and things this morning, and I thought maybe you would like to go out in the shed and turn the grindstone for me, to develop your muscles. Turning the grindstone is the healthiest thing a boy can do."

"That is all right enough," said the bad boy, as he took up a sweet cracker "but please take a good look at me.—Do I look like a grindstone boy? Do I resemble a good little boy that can't say 'no,' and goes off and turns a grindstone half a day for some old duffer, who pays him by giving him a handful of green currants, or telling him he will be a man some day, and the boy goes off one way with a lame back, while the good man goes the other way with a sharp scythe, and a chuckle at the softness of the boy! You are mistaken in me. I have passed the grindstone period, and you will have to pick up another sardine who has never done circular work. Not any grindstone for Hennery, if you please."

"You are getting too smart," said the grocery man, as he charged a pound of sweet crackers to the boy's father. "But what is it about your pa and ma being turned out of the church? I hear that they scandalized themselves horribly last Sunday."

"Well, you see, me and my chum put up a job on pa to make him think Sunday was only Saturday, and ma she fell into it, and I guess we are all going to get fired from the church for working on Sunday. You see, they didn't go to meetin' last Sunday because ma's new bonnet hadn't come, and Monday and Tuesday it rained, and the rest of the week was so muddy no one called, or they could not get anywhere, so Monday I slid out early and got the daily paper, and on Tuesday my chum he got the paper off the steps and put Monday's paper in its place. I watched when they were reading it, but they didn't notice the date. Then Wednesday we put Tuesday's paper on the steps and pa said it seemed more than Tuesday, but ma she got the paper of the day before and looked at the date and said it seemed so to her, but she guessed they had lost a day somehow. Thursday we got Wednesday's paper on the steps, and Friday we rung in Thursday's paper, and Saturday my chum he got Friday's paper on the steps, and ma said she guessed she would wash to-morrow, and pa said he would hoe in the garden and get the weeds out, so it would look better to folks when they went by Sunday to church. Well, Sunday morning came, and with it Saturday's daily paper, and pa barely glanced it over as he got on his overalls and went out in his shirt sleeves a-hoeing in the front garden. And I and my chum helped ma carry water to wash. She said it seemed like the longest week she ever saw, but when we brought the water and took a plate of pickles to the hired girl that was down with the mumps, we got in the lilac bushes and waited for the curtain to rise. It wasn't long before folks began going to church, and you'd a died laughing to see them stop in front of where ma was washing and look at her, and then go on to where pa was hoeing weeds and stop and look at him, and then drive on. After about a dozen teams had passed I heard ma ask pa if he knew who was dead, as there must be a funeral somewhere. Pa had just hoed into a bumblebee's nest and said he did not know of any that was dead, but knew some that ought to be, and ma she did not ask any foolish questions any more. After about twenty teams had stopped, ma she got nervous and asked Deacon Smith if he saw anything green; he said something about desecration and drove away.—Deacon Brown asked pa if he did not think he was setting a bad example before his boy, but pa he said he thought it would be a good one if the boy could only be hired to do it. Finally ma got mad and took the tub behind the house where they could not see her. About four o'clock that afternoon we saw a dozen of our congregation headed by the minister file into our yard, and my chum and I knew it was time to fly, so we got onto the back steps where we could hear. Pa met them at the door, expecting some bad news, and when they were seated ma she came in and remarked it was a very unhealthy year, and it stood people in hand to meet their latter end. None of them said a word until the elder put on his specs and said it was a solemn occasion, and ma she turned pale and wondered who it could be, and pa says don't keep us in suspense, who is dead? And the elder said no one was dead, but they called as a duty they owed the cause to take action on them for working on Sunday. Ma she fainted away, and they threw a pitcher of water down her back, and pa said he guessed they were a pack of lunatics, but they all swore it was Sunday and they saw ma washing and pa out hoeing as they went to church, and they had called to take action on them. Then there was a few minute's low conversation I could not catch, and then we heard pa kick his chair over and say it was more tricks of that darned boy, then we knew it was time to adjourn, and I was just getting through the back fence as pa reached me with a barrel stave, and that's what makes me limp some."

"That was real mean in you boys," said the grocery man. "It will be hard for your pa and ma to explain that matter. Just think how bad they must feel."

"Oh, I don't know. I remember hearing pa and Uncle Ezra telling how they fooled their father once, and got him to go to mill with a grist on Sunday, and pa said he would defy anybody to fool him on the day of the week. I don't think a man ought to tempt his little boy by defying him to fool his father. Well, I'll take a glass of your fifty cent cider and go," and the boy took a glass of cider and went out, and soon the grocery man looked out of the window and found that somebody had added a cipher to the "Sweet cider, only five cents a glass," making it an expensive drink, considering it was made of sour apples.—Peck's Sun.

Plymouth, the historic spot of Massachusetts, is being much visited of late. And there is no more delightful trip out of Boston harbor than a sail thither on the steamer Stamford, under the command of Capt. Davidson. She sails from Foster's wharf, Boston, at 9.15 A. M. on week days, and at 10 A. M. Sundays, and reaches Plymouth about 12 30, sailing on her return trip at 3 P. M., and arriving at her pier in Boston at 6 P. M. The stay in Plymouth is long enough to afford ample opportunity to see all the historic spots and monuments in the venerable and quaint town. The rock is now placed in a small railed enclosure under a tastefully decorated roof, and may be viewed on all sides with ease. The Stamford is a most attractive and clean boat.—Her engines and machinery are in great part new. Her saloon is large, handsomely fitted up, newly carpeted and upholstered, has new chandeliers. A large upright piano stands in the after-part of the saloon, and a full band of fifteen pieces accompanies the boat on her trips. No liquors are sold on the boat. A skilful pianist is engaged to play, and other musical attractions will be arranged during the summer. Dinner on the European plan, with a large and varied bill of fare, is served on board daily. The table appointments are of the best and the cuisine first-class in every detail. Foster's wharf is easily accessible, being the next pier to the landing of the Revere Beach R. R. in Boston, and the trip can be made with great enjoyment. The company have secured in the manager the pioneer in ocean excursions out of Boston and a man of large and extended steamboat experience. The travelling public may feel that their comfort will be carefully catered to by Mr. Wasgatt.

THERE ARE points connected with the wages paid by the Telegraph Company to their operators worthy of note at this time. It has been stated that in New York City, for example, the highest salary paid skilled operators is $80 per month, while the average is $53, or $13.25 per week, $1.90 per day. Contrast this with the pay of laborers in the common trades, viz.: masons, carpenters, plumbers, painters and others, and the result shows that the telegraph operator is the poorest paid of them all. At the same time he must have a better education and higher average of general intelligence than the ordinary laborer.

Independent of the strike, and of its merits, there is food for much reflection here. It is not alone in comparison with the telegraphers that this superiority of wages in favor of the trades holds true. It applies to bookkeepers, clerks in stores, and other employment which the youth of the present day prefer to the old fashioned method of "learning a trade." Let any man insert in our newspapers an advertisement requiring the services of a young man as clerk, bookkeeper, or in any business where the employe, in common parlance, can be "dressed up;" let him insert at the same time an advertisement for a young man to work on a farm, for example, with wages double that of the other service, and watch the result. The applicants for the former position will be greatly in excess of those for the latter, even at the minimum wages. The large number of young men who consider it beneath their dignity to work on a farm, or even at a trade, added to the competition of female labor in these lighter employments, has brought about this result.

The fact is, that now as well as for many years, there is no class of men better paid for their labor than the workmen in the lines of trade we have indicated. The New York Times says in that city good masons are paid from $3.50 to $4.00 per day; plasterers the same; carpenters, $2.50 to $3.50; plumbers, $4.00; house painters, $4.00; ordinary workmen at these trades, $2.00 to $2 50. This may be somewhat in excess of the wages earned by those tradesmen here, but in the main it holds true that these workmen, as well as those in many other trades, are receiving to-day higher wages than are paid to these telegraph operators, clerks and bookkeepers, with a few exceptions.

The price of labor has always been regulated by the supply. And in whatever branch female labor has been able to enter as a competitor, the supply has been abundant, particularly in this State. There is no reason why the female telegraph operator should not be equally as serviceable as the man; in many offices she has proved superior. And while this branch of labor is open to her, it is but reasonable to suppose that the applicants for such positions will increase rather than decrease among the female sex. It would add much to the industry of the country if our merchants and corporations would give the preference, in these fields where not manual but intellectual labor is requisite, to the female applicants, thus compelling the able-bodied man to seek employment where the opposite sex can never enter. This country needs to-day more of its young men in the field of agriculture. The demand for the products of her soil is on the increase, not only from our growing population, but from other countries.—The lands in the East, and more in the West, await cultivation. The country needs more a return to the farm or the trade among its young men. With it will come increased prosperity and wealth.

THE OFFICIAL business from the Post-office department at Washington was large one day last week. It consisted principally of mysterious looking documents from Hatton, the man who wanted to be Postmaster-General, informing the holders of lock boxes and drawers in this office the reasons in detail why they should pay fifty cents deposit for each key holden by them to their lock boxes. These reasons may seem clear enough to Mr. Hatton, but our business men do not relish it, and they are not to be blamed for it. Postmaster Randall has no option in the matter. He can only enforce the rule. But the holders of the boxes can decline to keep them, and the very object for which the lock boxes were established, the convenience of service to the business men of our town, will be defeated. We are informed that only a few have paid, and it is certain that there will be no necessity for any increase in boxes here. It is not the amount of money required, although it is more than double the price of the keys. Our people protest against the arbitrary manner in which the P. O. Department seeks to convince them that they have no rights which the Department is bound to respect.

Beyond question First Asst. Postmaster Hatton is the leader of this movement. And if he desires to injure the Republican party, and make a laughing stock of himself, he can chose no better way of doing it. We have never heard of any trouble being occasioned by the loss of these keys. The holders of the boxes are not school boys, but our best business houses in town, who are not in the habit of depositing the small sum of fifty cents before they can have a key to a Post-office box, for fear they might, like little children, lose it. If the Post-office department has any respect for itself, it will promptly revoke this ruling. And we doubt if any great sorrow would be expressed by the people if Hatton should be as promptly removed. The ruling applies to such offices as ours throughout the country, and an immense revenue must come to the department. If the people will decline to comply with Hatton's desire, as expressed in his official circular, not alone in Peabody, but elsewhere, there is a possibility of their rights being respected in a measure.

WHETHER OR not Butler is defeated this fall in Massachusetts, a greater harmony is being developed in the Republican party. This is becoming evident day by day. Last year at this time rival factions were contending for the supremacy. The boom for Bishop was being worked for all it was worth. It is evident that this feeling was so intense that in portions of the state where Crapo was strong, notably in the vicinity of New Bedford, apathy was the result. No such feeling is manifest this year. On the contrary there is a determination that the leader selected shall be the harmonious choice of all sections of the state. Too much attention cannot be given to the primary caucuses which will be holden not many weeks hence. This is the voice of the entire Republican press. Let the best men of the party be the representatives at the Convention. Let the nominee be the choice of the party through these representatives. Such a man will bring out the voters who were not at the polls last fall. Then, if defeated, we shall know that it is not because of any dissensions in the party. The election of Butler this fall means the overthrow of all hopes of the Democrats in 1884, and this the leaders of that party are beginning clearly to see.

THE BODY of Capt. Webb has been recovered. This must be gratifying to his friends and will set at rest forever the foolish notion that a dummy went over the Falls. We believe Capt. Webb was a brave man, and that he confidently expected to go through this perilous undertaking in safety. His accustomed exposure to experiments, considered foolhardy, had hardened him to danger, and this last adventure was only one of a series in his mind. But it is only another evidence of man's lack of power over the elements of Nature. His family have and will have the sympathy of all true and good men. His body will be brought to the East and interred at Hull, by the side of the ocean which he loved so well.

The failure of Copeland & Co., the large shoe firm of Boston, and F. Shaw & Bro., probably the largest tanners of New England, is a prominent topic of conversation among our leather dealers Fortunately their indebtedness in this town is small. A large amount of Shaw's paper is held by the banks in New England and Canada.

Frank Cousins has a lot of new bargains placed on his bargain counter today. He names his goods and prices in his advertisement, to which we invite particular attention, for they are attractive.

SO. PEABODY.—The case of the government against Geo. W. Davis for assault upon Lewis E. Allen, came up in the police court yesterday by continuance. The only witness for the government was I. H. Beede, who testified to seeing Davis strike Allen several blows, while Davis held Allen's head under his arm, and also to Davis kicking Allen in the side after he (Beede) had taken him away from Allen and was holding his hands. Davis admitted that the testimony of Beede was in substance correct, and said that he struck the first blow because of Allen's persisting in going into the house, and the language he used toward him. By the aid of his counsel he said there was no feeling on his part, and he was sorry the punishment was so severe. Davis was represented by Lawyer Benjamin of Salem, who asked for the discharge of the prisoner on the ground that the assault was justifiable. The evidence on the part of the government was not so plenty as was expected, owing to the absence of Dr. Osborne and Lewis E. Allen, the latter not being able to appear However Justice Merrill thoroughly understood the case and bound the prisoner over to the Superior Court in Lawrence, Oct. 1, in the sum of $1500. I. H. Beede stood as his bondsman.

Bertie Murray reports that he was slapped across the face and had his money taken from him that he received for his papers last Saturday night.

The work of extending the water pipes on Lynnfield street was commenced last week. They will be laid as far as the house of Jas. E. Trask.

The work of cleaning out the reservoir and building the roadway will be completed in about two weeks.

A large crowd of people was attracted to the gypsies camp last Sunday.

The Danvers Mirror says: "John Scott's horse, standing at his quarry in Peabody this week, scared at a locomotive and backed into a pond of water three feet deep, falling on his back, and was saved by Mr. Scott jumping in the water and holding up the horse's head until assistance was rendered in getting him out.

A party of six tramps struck the town last Friday, and first tried to pick a row with the gypsies, and not succeeding they started out on a begging expedition. They called at houses where they thought the male members were not at home, and insulted and threatened the inmates. No violence was offered.

A black snake fully six feet long reared itself in front of a horse attached to a butcher's cart, just before passing the ice houses last Saturday. The horse stopped and stood upon his hind legs, but before the driver could realize what the trouble was, the snake had disappeared.

Street car horses do not, on the average, last more than five or six years. Hard work uses them up. Think of this when you are on the car heavily loaded.

One day last week a street peddler passed through this part of the town with a large tarantula pinned to the side of his wagon. He found it in a bunch of bananas. The bite of this animal, which is a species of spider, is deadly poison.

Almy, Bigelow & Webber will begin to offer some extra bargains the present week, this being "the last of the season." They have just taken their regular semi-annual inventory and now propose to close out a very large assortment of goods in their various departments.

If any reader of this paragraph remembers the date and circumstances that inagurated the temperance meetings of 1860-61, in the South Church vestry, also the Band of Hope that met in the same place about that time, or a little later, a favor will be conferred by communicating such information to Mrs. M. O. Stevens. Any other date concerning temperance work is also desired.

FREE SCHOLARSHIP.

In accordance with the annexed resolve, approved June 2, 1883, in favor of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, at Amherst, whereby eighty free scholarships are established, said scholarships to be assigned equally to each Senatorial district, Senator William Sparhawk, of the Second Essex District, embracing town of Marblehead, city of Salem, towns of Peabody and Lynnfield, has invited William D. T. Trefry, Esq., of Marblehead, Prof. D. B. Hagar, of Salem, and Amos Merrill, Esq., of Peabody, to act as an examining board to test the qualifications of any one who may decide to enter into a competitive examination, in writing, for the mentioned gratuitous scholarships upon the following subjects: English grammar, geography, arithmetic, algebra, through simple equations, and the history of the United States.

The first term of the collegiate year opens Thursday, Sept. 13, 1883. Parties who wish to enter an examination for the above free scholarships will send name and address to Senator William Sparhawk, P. O Box 207, Marblehead, Mass, who will inform them of the time and place of the examination.

The above presents a most excellent opportunity for two of the young men of the district to secure a sound practical education at a cost that has been reduced to a minimum. Tuition is free. Room rent $15 00 to $30 00 per year, according to location of room; board from $90.00 to $130.00 a year; total necessary expenses from $175 to $250 per year; one half of which the student can earn by his labor if he so desires.

Chapter 46 of the Acts and Resolves of the General Court for 1883 reads as follows: That annually for the term of four years eighty free scholarships be and hereby are established at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, the same to be given by appointment to persons in this Commonwealth after a competitive examination under the rules prescribed by the President of the College at such time and place as the Senator then in office from each district shall designate, and the said scholarships shall be assigned equally to each Senatorial district, but if there shall be less than two success ful applicants for scholarships from any Senatorial district, such scholarships may be distributed by the President of the College equally among the other Districts, as nearly as possible, but no applicant shall be entitled to a scholarship unless he shall pass an examination in accordance with the rules to be established as herein before provided. aug 1—4t

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The Boston Journal contained the following complimentary notice of our respected townsman: Major Lewis Allen, President of the Warren National Bank, was 89 years old Thursday, having been born July 26, 1794, at Weston, Mass. He is now the oldest man but one in town, his senior being Mr. Joshua Buxton. When he was 4 years of age his father died, leaving a family of three children, of whom he was the oldest. In three years his mother was again married, and became the mother of nine more children, their father dying when the subject of this article was 13 years old, so that on him depended in a large measure the support of the whole family. Young Allen struggled manfully for the family's maintenance, and at the age of 21 years and 5 days, Aug. 1, 1815, he had saved from his earnings $50, which he put into the shoe manufacturing business. By his indomitable and untiring zeal, perseverance and honesty, he has risen step by step in wealth and distinction, till to-day there are few, if any in our community who command more influence. He was one of the first Directors of the Warren National Bank, and was one of the committee who obtained the bank charter. He has been its President for the past forty years. In 1830, when the town was in its infancy and when a large undertaking was looked upon as a folly, he built Allen's old block, and was the butt of much ridicule. The wisdom of his action was appreciated in after years. Mr. Allen has displayed traits of pluck and enterprise worthy of imitation, and it is the wish of his townsmen that he may long live to enjoy the fruits of an industrious and honorable life.

The first picnic of the Tanners and Curriers' Union took place at Smith's Grove, Andover, last Thursday. The party left Salem on the Boston and Lowell railroad at 9.30 o'clock; nineteen cars were necessary to convey the crowd that attended. They arrived at the grove at about eleven, and proceeded to enjoy themselves as best they could. Some engaged in boating, swinging and enjoying the beautiful scenery, which the grove afforded. Everything was lovely until about 12 o'clock, when some of the roughs that usually frequent such places, commenced to raise a disturbance, which was kept up until the party left the grove. The disturbance was caused by the parties in the grove imbibing too freely of liquor which was for sale in unlimited quantities in the grove; a Salem party it is said paid three hundred dollars for the privilege. The police did all they could to suppress the riot that at one time threatened to be serious, but were roughly handled by the crowd. Not a man was arrested. This town was represented by officer M. W. Cummings. Towards evening the Andover police visited the scene, having been sent for by some of the committee and proceeded to stop the sale of liquor, which was accomplished with the help of the other officers. About four o'clock the sports of the day commenced. After a fashion the picnickers were loaded on the train and in due season arrived home.

The order of arrangements for the Exhibition of the Essex Agricultural Society to be held at Salem Willows, Sept. 25 and 26, has been published. The cattle and other stock will be exhibited at the City Farm; the fruits, vegetables and other products at the Rink. The address will be delivered by Hon. Chas. P. Thompson of Gloucester. We notice the names of the following Peabody people on the committees: On herd of Milch cows, Jas. P. King; heifers, 2d class, Elbridge Mansfield; stallions, E. C. Farwell; pairs of draft horses, F. H. Appleton; swine, 1st class, Robt. Buxton; swivel ploughing, E. Pope Barrett; dairy, Frank Marsh; counterpanes, carpets and rugs, Isaac Hardy; work by children under twelve years of age, Mrs. James P. King; on farms, James P. King; improving wet meadow and swamp lands, Rev. Willard Spaulding; fattening cattle and swine, Bowman Viles; auditors, E. Pope Barrett. James P. King is one of the delegates to attend exhibitions of Farmers' Clubs, and Fruit Growers' Associations in the county, and he is also on the committee of arrangements for the Fair. Francis H. Appleton is Chief Marshal.

Postmaster Randall has been notified of the reduction in postage rates which is to take effect October 1, and directed to prepare for it. He is instructed to take all available means without incurring any expense to call public attention to the coming reduction, so that purchasers may not accumulate an unnecessary supply of three-cent stamps and envelopes. The department will be ready to issue the two-cent stamps of the new design September 15, but these stamps and envelopes must not be placed on sale or used by post-masters before October.

The Salem Overseers of the Poor have been called upon by the Peabody Overseers to care for a man and his family of five children, who have lived in Peabody for a number of years, but who, it is claimed, never gained a residence there because of the non-payment of taxes. It is stated that he served the town in the Fire Department for some years and was therefore exempt from taxation. Peabody declines to recognize this service, and as her ex-fireman has become a charge, sends him back to Salem.—Salem Gazette. We learn that the person in question has been helped by the town for several years and Salem has always re-imbursed the town for such help, and that the Salem Overseers understand the case and recognize the claim as a just one.

It was a singular accident that happened last week to a young lady, who resides in a thickly settled part of the town, and we are going to mention it, but not call any names. The young lady and an elder sister occupied a room in the rear part of the house, the bed standing next to the window opening into the bath room. Shortly after midnight the elder sister was startled to hear a scream from her sister and on lighting the gas it was found that the young lady on account of, perhaps, a dream, had kicked both feet through the window, the glass cutting one foot and also a gash in the calf of her leg. It was quite an adventure and fortunate it was no worse.

The new postal notes, which are being prepared at New York and will be ready about Sept. 1, are shaped like bank notes. Blank spaces are left for names of the post office issuing the note and of that which is to redeem it. The charge for the note will be three cents in addition to its face. The notes are transferable, but must be presented for payment within a limited time, so that they can not long circulate as currency. It is probable that they will be accepted as current money by dealers in towns or cities where they are payable, and it will not be necessary for the person who receives the order to go to the post office to collect it.

Mrs. Lutetia, wife of Henry Moore, residing on Franklin street, died last Sabbath evening. Mrs. Moore was a victim of consumption, that dread disease of this climate, and had been in feeble health for a number of years. For two years she had been constantly failing. She was a native of Hollis, N. H., whither she came to this town on her marriage. Her funeral took place this afternoon. Rev. Mr. Sperry officiating.

There is nothing so aggravating to the housewife as to receive inferior groceries, and those that are not fresh and nice. Such complaint never comes from the patrons of the well known establishment of Bushby & Co. The best that can be found in the market is none too good for Bushby. And the best of it is, that he does not charge any more for it than is desired by many for a much inferior article. This is the secret of his large trade in this town.

Young Goodwin, who was taken to the Danvers Insane Asylum some three weeks since, is to be taken out this afternoon by Mr. Spaulding. The intention is to give him an opportunity to do better. If he persists in his previous actions it is probable that the money will be put in trust for him, or he himself put under guardianship. Only a limited amount of money will be allowed him.

Mr. George P. Tilton, an aged and well known citizen of our town, died at his residence on Lowell street, this morning shortly after twelve o'clock. Mr. Tilton came to this town from New Hampshire and had been engaged in the butchery business. He leaves a son, Benj. Tilton, and a daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Towne. His age was 82 years 8 mos. 5 days. Funeral Friday, at three P. M.

The Republican State Central Committee met in Boston yesterday, and it was decided that the call for the Republican Convention be issued for Sept. 19, and that it be held in Boston. This is in accordance with a vote of the Convention last year. It was decided to invite Col. Chas. R. Codman to preside.

The fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. W. G. Sperry, occurred last Sunday. He happily alluded to it and gave several statistics. One hundred persons have united with the church during that time.

The drug store of William T. Lee has always had a reputation for a very superior quality of soda. It has it today, and the choicest flavors and best soda is to be had at Lee's. Try it and see.

Sixty-eight years ago to-day, within the memory of our oldest inhabitants, occurred a terrific hail storm. Glass was broken, and much damage done.

Fire Department Notes.—Frank J. Woodbury, foreman of Hose 1 of Leominster, is visiting in town. Mr. Woodbury is a thorough fireman and is well pleased with the workings of our department.

The alarm of fire Thursday evening was caused by the burning of a brush pile on Caller street. Time in getting out after the alarm first given was about five minutes. Time spent in hunting around for the cause of alarm about ten minutes. Reason for delay, Poor system of fire alarm.

An agent of the Abbott Downing Co., of Concord, N. H., was in town Friday trying to sell some hose carriages.

There is one thing that should be stopped, and that is the habit of people outside the department getting on the apparatus and riding, thereby getting in the way and taking the places of the regular firemen. It was done last Thursday evening, and always is when the machines are out. They crowd into the engine house and stable when the firemen are hitching out, and confuse both horses and men.

In the report of the trial of steam fire engines in New York city, July 10, we see the name of assistant Engineer Geo. O. Pierce, of this department, mentioned as being among the spectators.

Mr. Ira A. Burnham has secured the privilege of selling the score cards at the coming firemen's muster at Portsmouth, N. H.

The programme of the Firemen's Muster at Portsmouth, N. H., Aug. 28, 29 and 30, is laid out as follows: First Day, Reception of Engine and hose companies, and review by the Mayor; collations at the engine houses, and the assignment of places at the camp ground at Langdon Park; visits to the navy yard and war vessels; Grand Rowing Regatta in the afternoon, and torchlight parade and fireworks in the evening. Second day, Parade of N. H. Militia; reception of Governor, Secretary of Navy, Governors of other States, and other distinguished guests. At 10 o'clock, the grand procession will be formed, and at the close of the march, a clam-bake will be served to all visiting companies. The drawing for prizes will take place at the Mayor's office at 6.30 o'clock on this day. Contest by the different military bands in the evening, and a concert by the consolidated bands in Market square. Third day, Trial of steamers and hand engines, and hose carriage races. One of the largest halls in the city will be devoted to the exhibition of fire apparatus, fire escapes, etc. The railroads leading into the city will carry firemen at half fare and apparatus free. All arrangements have been made for the comfort and convenience of the visiting companies, and with the record of their past musters, the Portsmouth firemen intend that this one shall beat them all.

North Peabody.— Mr. A. W. Howe gave a lawn party at his residence last Thursday evening, which was largely attended. The Tapleyville band furnished music; ice cream and refreshments were served.

Mr. D. Hall Rice, of Lowell, has placed a boat in Water's river for the use of Miss Francis V. Stentiford.

Mr. H. W. Gordon, painter for the firm of Pike & Whipple, we regret to learn, lost a child last Monday night.

Mr. John Brainard Wilson, of Harvard, is peddling vegetables at the Willows and Marblehead Neck.

Some malicious persons stoned the house of Miss Elizabeth Wilson last Saturday night, breaking glass and doing other damage.

Mr. Samuel Trask is burning his first kiln of bricks for the season.

Judge Bennett Blake and wife, of Nacogdoches, Texas, and Miss L. L. Blake, also Mrs. Dea. A. S. Blake, have gone to the White Mountains and Newport, Vt.

Mr. J. B. Wilson is having his barn shingled.

Austin Clough, formerly of this town, but now of Wenham, observed his tin wedding last evening. He was a member of the old Jackson Club, an organization that met over Symonds' store years ago, and it is rumored that a number of the old members from this town were present to extend congratulations.

To-day a team of Hamilton & Balcomb, carpenters of Salem, loaded with lumber, collided with Robinson's bakery wagon, which was standing on the corner of Foster and Main streets, driving the lumber through the top of the wagon and throwing the contents to the ground. The wagon was somewhat injured.

Mr. Frank Robinson is working as news agent for Armstrong on the E. R. R. trains out of Boston.

Mr. Benjamin Perley recently caught a black bass at Sauntaug Lake, that weighed three and one-half pounds.

PRESENT POWER.

TO-MORROW A LONG WAY OFF WHEN HELP IS WANTED TO-DAY.

Comfort is never in a hurry. Pain and distress are in hot haste. It is to the "friend in need"—the friend who does something now—that the old adage pays the compliment of being "a friend indeed." That they do not keep the sufferer in suspense is the salient excellence of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. The plasters of other days—whether porous or otherwise—said—"Wait until to-morrow: We can promise nothing on the spur of the moment." But pain unrelieved, like hope deferred, maketh the heart sick. Benson's plasters act on application. They permeate, soothe, warm and heal, containing, as they do, chemical and medicinal agents of the highest efficiency. Their motto is NOW, and the genuine have the word CAPCINE cut in the middle of each plaster. Price 25 cents. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

The Old Minstrel.

STRANGE CIRCUMSTANCES UNDER WHICH THE "SWANEE RIVER" WAS SUNG.

The Opera hall was crowded, for the famous minstrels were giving a benefit performance. They had just concluded the sweet refrain of the "Swanee River." The tumult of applause was hushed by the appearance of a ragged old wreck crowding to the front.

Lifting his banjo as a sign of brotherhood, he cried with a choking voice, "Boys, sing that song once more—once more for a poor old minstrel's sake. It brings back the lost and dead; my old home rises before me, where I was once good and happy all the day.—I learned the song there of my mother. The vision of her smiling face praising the boy comes back with the ringing notes of the banjo and the memories of long ago. I wandered away to play for the world. It listened and applauded. I was flattered, feasted, intoxicated with fame and the whirl of pleasures.—But I wrecked it all. Now, old and broken in heart and strength, I am left with but one friend—my banjo. No one listens to it, for the world has found new favorites, and the old minstrel is turned away. She who first praised me died while I was playing for the world—died without seeing me for years. The song she taught her boy led him from her side. He left her for the world. The world has forsaken him as he did her. Boys, sing my mother's song again, and let my old heart thrill with a better life once more."

The house signalled its assent. The old minstrel sat down in the front row. When the solo reached the concluding lines of the second stanza, the singer's eyes turned pityingly upon the wanderer, and with voice trembling with emotion came the words—

"All up and down this world I wandered,
When I was young;
Oh, many were the days I squandered,
Many were the songs I sung."

The stranger sat bending forward, the tears coursing down the furrows of care, his fingers unconsciously caressing the strings of his battered banjo.—All the summer of his life came back to his heart again—mother, home, love, and all his boyish dreams.

The chorus began, and the shrivelled fingers sought the chords, and, with a strange weird harmony unheard before, the strains floated along the tide of song. The house was spellbound.—The time-worn instrument seemed to catch its master's spirit, and high above the orchestra accompaniment rang the soul-like chords from the quivering strings.

When the interlude came, the minstrel leaned over his banjo with all the fondness of a mother over her babe Not a sound from either was heard. The solo rose again and the almost supernatural harmonies drifted with it. But he bowed like a mourner over the dead. Every heart in the audience was touched, and tears of sympathy were brushed away by many a jewelled hand. The singer's eyes were moist, and with plaintive sadness the last lines were sung:

"When shall I hear the bees a humming
All around the comb,
When shall I hear the banjo tumming,
Down in my good old home."

The last chorus followed. The hoary head of the minstrel was lifted and his face shone with the light of a new dawning. His voice joined with a peculiar blending, perfect in harmony, yet keeping with his banjo high above the singers, ringing like a rich harpstring long overstrained. The memory of better days, the waywardness, sorrow, remorse, hope and despair of all his life seemed pent up in those marvelous tones. The chorus closed and his head sank down, the long white locks shrouding the banjo.

The manager came before the curtain and said: "The minstrels give one-half the benefit proceeds to the wandering brother." The house approved with loud demonstrations. A collection started in the galleries and swept over the hall like a golden shower.—The two sums were heaped together on the stage. Such a contribution never graced the footlights before. Again the audience broke forth into round after round of hearty good cheers.

But the banjo was still hushed under the shroud of snow-white hair, and no word of thanks or token of gratitude came from the silent figure towards which all eyes were turned. They called him to the stage and the manager went to escort him there. He laid his hand on the bowed head—the soul of the old minstrel had wandered away once more. He was dead. His heart had sung that last song on the borders of the spirit land—sung it as the bird sings when it escapes the prison bars which makes life "sad and dreary," and flies far away from the scenes where "the heart grows weary longing."—Council Bluffs Nonpareil.

BEECHER'S BAD HEAD. — For two months in the year Henry Ward Beecher can't preach. In August and September he takes his vacation and endures the onset of the hay fever. And it is, so he says, something terrible and tremendous. A man with hay fever isn't accountable for his actions. He is merely a wild beast—frantic with snuffling, sneezing and headache. His eyes are red and so is his nose. Every nerve in his skull thrills with distress and his head is a fountain of tears. He lives only to fly from seaside to mountain-top in search of relief. And yet, whether we call this form of Catarrh hay-fever, rose-fever, hay-cold or rose-cold, Ely's Cream Balm will cure it. This remedy is simple, pleasant and easy of application. Placed in the nostrils it penetrates and soothes the affected parts at once, restores the impaired senses and creates healthy secretions in cases of the longest standing. You cannot run away from hay fever, but you can drive it from you by using Ely's Cream Balm.

Counterfeits of the first issue of the new 5-cent piece are in circulation. The imitation is a very poor one, of light lead color, and the 13 stars surrounding the head of the goddess of liberty are much smaller than on the original piece. There is an open space between the bottom of the V in the latter coin. In the counterfeit the V almost touches the wreath underneath.

A PARTIALLY DEAD MAN.—The Morning Herald, Baltimore, Md., states: Major B. S. White, of this city, describes his miraculous cure as follows: "I have been a partially dead man for ten years. Doctors attributed my sufferings to the enlargement of certain glands. The quantity of medicine I took without relief would be sufficient to set up a first-class apothecary shop. Finally St. Jacobs Oil was recommended. I had my spinal column thoroughly rubbed with it. All those knots, kinks and stiffness have passed away, and I am myself again."

The sixth edition of "The North Shore" by Benj. D. Hill and W. S. Nevins, has been published. It is an illustrated guide to Marblehead, Salem, Beverly, Manchester-by-the-Sea, Magnolia, Gloucester, Rockport, Peabody and Swampscott. It is for sale by all booksellers.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

Decreased sales of postage stamps are noted, in anticipation of the change of rates on October 1.

Damonia, the new remedy advertised in our columns, is a magnetic mineral earth lately discovered in Texas, which a careful analysis of our most prominent chemists declares to contain the most potent medical ingredients. A trial is recommended.

MOTHER'S SPINNING WHEEL.

CONCERNING ONE ARTICLE THAT WAS NOT FOR SALE, AND ANOTHER WHICH IS CHEAP AT ANY PRICE.

"No, sir, I wouldn't sell you that for any money; that spinning-wheel was my mother's. It was one day, when she was singing like a lark and making this old wheel hum, that my father, then a young medical student, afterwards a farmer, fell in love with her—some fifty years ago."

So spoke the proprietor of a rough bit of farm land in Ulster County, N. Y., to a relic-hunter, and "mother's" spinning-wheel remained among her children and grandchildren.

"My mother," writes Rev. J. W. Phelps, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. Church, Chicago, has used PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and wishes me to say that she has found it more effective than anything she ever used for invigorating and strengthening the system debilitated by malaria. She desires me also especially to mention the certainty with which it aids digestion and overcomes exhaustion."

Ever since the first household was established "mother's" opinion has been more potent in this world than that of judge, jurist or physician. Her hand has always cooled the fever and her voice has been filled with hope. With each day's decline, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is becoming more deservedly popular with the women who guard alike husband and children. It eradicates malarial poison from the blood, from which there is now such wide spread suffering.

Please observe: DR. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not an essence of ginger. It is a combination of several ingredients, of which none singly can produce anything like its effect. For Kidney, Stomach and Liver troubles, it is the standard and unfailing remedy. In two sizes; 50 cents and $1. The latter the cheaper. HISCOX & Co., Chemists, New York.

"IT'S A GOOD THING

AND I KNOW IT," WERE THE WORDS OF MR. LEVI PORTER, THE CELEBRATED FASHIONABLE CUTTER TO THE FIRM OF NATHAN & TAYLOR, UNDER THE NARRAGANSETT HOUSE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.—SHOWS WHAT AN HONEST THING WILL DO.

"It's a good thing; I know it's a good thing." Such were the words addressed to your reporter when he called at the fashionable establishment of Nathan & Taylor, under the Narragansett House, Providence, R. I. The speaker was Mr. Leroy Porter, head manager of the tailoring department of this large clothing house, as he was cutting his way through a mammoth pile of brocades, Scotch plaids and broadcloths.

"I felt sometimes as if there was a cannon ball resting on my stomach. I would have to get up at night, for I was so short of breath. You see in the Spring—our busy season—we are at work sixteen hours per day. Have short times for meals, and at irregular hours. My stomach became very much disordered, and I was all out of health, I tried every kind of medicines. The doctors said it was a touch of dyspepsia. I could get nothing to do me permanent good until a friend recommended Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. I know it's a good medicine. It has completely cured me of stomach disorders and indigestion. It seems to be a thorough cleanser of the system from biliousness or anything of that kind. I know this for I've tried it. I'm in the best of health now, but should I ever have a dyspeptic turn again Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY would be my source of relief. Dr Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY acts upon the digestive organs in a charming manner, regulating their action, strengthening and purifying the whole system."

In Camp.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—Fishing and its vicissitudes are to me the summit of happiness. To wade and slump beside a trout pool in the dewy morning, casting a fly here and a bug there into the still, sleeping water delicately tinged by the level rays of the early sun, which glance upon the speckled beauties as they flash their dazzling lengths from the dark depths and disappear in prism of silvery spray as suddenly as they appeared,—this I call perfection. For this sport one of the best locations I ever visited is Turner's Camp, a delightful spot among the mountains of western New England, upon the shore of a lovely lake, teeming with trout and other game fish. Many a morning of late have I looked from my cabin door across the crystal water overhung by mist, and heard the drum of the cock partridge sounding in the uplands, as he searched for grubs in the decayed stumps of trees which had fallen, not by the lumberman's axe, but by multitude of years.

The squirrels chattered and scolded in the tops of the lofty pines, as these monarchs of the forests faintly sighed to the whispering zephyrs, dropping great drops of odorous gum upon the very roof of my little home. In the stillness of evening the long, quavering cry of the raccoon from his den among the rocks broke the silence, to be answered by the complaint of the owl as he moped among the branches of the gnarled oaks on the hills beyond the peaceful lake. Bands of deep-voiced frogs amongst the lily pads below me seemed to vie with each other in their quaint, staccato solos, bringing forth the approval or disgust of ancient goggle-eyed judges, whose resonant lower registers fell most pleasantly upon the ear. And when sombre and dark-hued night gradually drew her curtains over the shadowy forests, dusk almost imperceptibly became darkness. From the cerulean dome of the cloudless heavens, the stars cast their twinkling rays upon the pellucid bosom of the sleeping lake. Unnumbered sparks glowed through measureless space to be mirrored and glow again upon the unruffled water. Upon the far away hills dead pines stretched their bare, scant arms against the sky. They seemed to watch and guard the living forests beneath them. But as the shadows deepened, they swiftly faded and vanished. Occasionally a song bird would faintly utter a few strains, as if in a dream, and then sink again into its peaceful slumbers.

How have I enjoyed myself in these forests, miles from man and his habitations, removed from the tumult of the noisy city, with nought to place restriction upon me, cares and business as foreign to me as when a schoolboy! What a boon to a tired man is a fortnight in these solitudes. Yesterday morning I caught the largest fish that I have pulled into my boat during my stay. It was a bass. I was seated in the stern of the boat, the bow being moored to a stump, in about twenty feet of water. My hook was baited with a live frog and I had sunk my line at the end of a light rod in perhaps eighteen feet of water. I had hooked several small fish and was almost determined to pull up anchor and troll for pickerel. Suddenly I felt a tremendous pull at the end of my rod. The line straightened and tightened at the end of my rod, snap went the tip and the line began to slip through my fingers as the fish darted and swaved in his frenzy. At last he turned and lay upon the water, a bass, weighing between nine and ten pounds. W. WILLARD.

THE ART AMATEUR for August contains a striking four-page design of lilies and butterflies for a South Kensington screen panel, a design of daisies for a desert plate, three pages of designs and suggestions for monograms and jewelry, and three pages of wood carving designs. There is a page of drawings from Paris Salon pictures, and "My Note Book" gives a spicy record of foreign art events. Among the subjects practically treated are landscape painting in oils, lettering on china, wood carving, and mural decoration. There are also articles of much interest on early English pottery, ornamental iron work, old illuminations, the remarkable print collection of Prof. West of Brooklyn, and numerous other art topics. Price, 35 cents; $4 per annum. Montague Marks, publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

A Swamp man, who takes the precaution to say that he never feels that way himself, desires us to publish the following for the benefit of those who do:

A WIFE OUT OF TOWN.

Of all the insiduous
Temptations invidious,
Contrived by the devil for pulling men down,
There's none more delusive,
Seductive, abusive,
Than the snare to a man with a wife out of town.

He feels such a delightfulness,
Stay-out-all-night-fulness,
Shall-I-get-tight-fulness,
I own it with pain!
A bachelor rakishness,
What-will-you-takishness,
Next day's headache-ishness,
None can explain!

His wife may be beautiful,
Tender and dutiful,
'Tis not that her absence would cause him delight;
But the cursed opportunity,
Baleful immunity,
Scatters his scruples as day scatters night.

He feels whisky-and-waterful
Rapine and slaughter-ful,
Nothing-he-ought-to-ful,
To his toes' ends;
So bachelor-rally-some,
Quite corps-du-ballet-some,
Make-stories-tally-some,
With friends.

Shoe and Leather Reporter.

We copy the following from the Newburyport Herald. We have personal knowledge of Mr. Prescott, and would advise sending for him if rods are desired that are a sure protection.

GROUND ELECTRIC CURRENTS.—Four years ago when the Prescott Protection from lightning was first introduced into this city, the majority of the people raised quite a cry of fraud, or another man's dodge to sell lightning rods; yet there were a few who took the trouble to investigate the matter by giving me many tests where lightning had previously struck—all were hidden—as far as many remained to designate the spots to any strangers. Those tests proved the fallacy of theory which was acknowledged by the investigators, and many improved the opportunity of having their lightning rods adjusted to the ground batteries or electric current. Slowly and surely has the theory expanded until most every solid thinking person, where it has been demonstrated, has accepted it as a true natural law, as accurate in its effect as the finest working battery. The result of the showers July 4th and 5th proved in several instances the correctness of this fact. Many said we will wait to see if your demonstrations are true, and if they prove themselves we shall be obliged to accept it as a correct law. The buildings of Charles Lunt of Oldtown were damaged slightly, the electricity passing directly to the ground, which was not protected, although the consequences were fully demonstrated four years ago; also another was Captain Chas. Bayley's house on Purchase street. The position of the electric current was determined in making a test where the lightning had struck in Purchase street school yard. This current proved to be the same one which was answered to on Mr. Bayley's house. Another was determined four years ago at the house of G. H. Roaf, High street, which was perfectly marked by the lightning path to the ground current. These facts, with the correct working of the electric fluid on the three rodded buildings, Catholic church, Parochial school, and Greenough's stable, which were properly protected from lightning, must surely carry their weight to those who wanted proof that the work was done correctly. The Catholic church was struck by lightning six years ago and damaged, although it had the same lightning rods then that it has at the present time. I called on Mr. Teeling the following year and showed him the active currents under the church, which convinced him that the rods' terminus was not in the right position. The proof was so strong that Mr. Teeling had me adjust the ground rods to the electric currents that passed under the church, which has proved its absolute protection. On an examination of the Old South church there were found two currents, one passing under the church near the old iron lightning rod which conveyed the fluid to the ground; the other went from west to east, from corner to corner, the cause of the damage, and no doubt the cause of the famous whispering gallery, similar to the action of the modern telephone. These facts can go on record, and will surely stand the test.

Respectfully,
A. R. Prescott,
Electrician.

HEAD OF CENTRAL.

Last Wednesday, 18th inst., was the twenty-second anniversary of the skirmish at Blackburn's Ford, five miles from Centerville, three days previous to the Bull Run battle. In this engagement, "Old Company H," of the 1st Regiment, the first three years company of Chelsea, received its baptism of fire and blood, which resulted in five dead comrades, seven wounded and one missing. The dead were George Bacon, Philander Crowell, Thomas Harding, James Murphy and Thomas Needham, who died some time after from his wounds. The wounded were Geo. W. Gray, Nelson A. Huse, Allan A. Kingsbury, Wm. Grantman, Geo. G. Learned, Wm. D Grover and Orville Bisbee. The last four still survive and reside in this city. Mr. Gray lives in Peabody, but Kingsbury was killed afterwards at the historic "taking of the lunette" at Yorktown by Company H., April 26, 1862. It is not known whether Huse is now living or dead. The one missing was Albert Wentworth, a tall and very young soldier, from whom nothing has ever been heard. The bloody initiation was the beginning of a most honorable and marked record for this company, mention of which is made in the story of the war.—Chelsea Telegraph & Pioneer.

The redemption of the two-cent stamp on bank checks is a matter of some interest to business men and bankers. The banks are not acting in concert in the matter. Some of them with a good many checks on hand, loose and bound, have sent them to Washington and had them redeemed. The evidence is the return of the checks with the words "stamp redeemed," printed in red ink on the face of each stamp. Other banks are pocketing the loss of the stamps where the number not used is not very large, rather than take the trouble of collecting the books from customers and going through all the red tape and bother that the redemption requires. As far as depositors with check books are concerned, there is a general indifference. The banks have paid for the checks, and it is scarcely worth while to call in a book with 50 checks or less for the sake of redemption. Then, again, the actual books must be sent, not the checks, and most business men are naturally averse to the stubs of their checks being seen. — Lawrence American.

In appointing Mr. Charles H. Litchman clerk of the railroad commission, the governor displayed his usual foresight. Mr. Litchman was the greenback candidate for councillor last year and Colonel Haskell, the republican nominee, was elected because of the 4928 votes which Mr. Litchman drew from the regular democratic candidate Mr. A. A. Mower. The total majority against Colonel Haskell was 1771, and now that Mr. Litchman has been "provided for," it is hoped that this majority can be cast for a single man, and one more democrat put into the council to sustain Mr. Maguire. Senator John R. Baldwin of Lynn is mentioned as the man best fitted to bear the democratic standard, although it is possible that Mr. Mower will run again. The battle will be a hard one, however, for Colonel Haskell is popular in the district, and the republicans are confident of casting a much larger vote than last year. In Lynn, especially, the divisions which weakened the republican organization so much last year will no longer exist, and a very handsome gain is expected.—Boston Advertiser.

Another season probably will see open cars in the latest Boston style with seats on top.

The staging in the large hall of our new town building is being removed to-day.

Don't forget the attractions of the Skating Rink, at the Willows, this week.

A great improvement is noticeable on Foster street, by the painting of the telephone poles.

Twenty summer boarders are stopping at the new hotel of George Skinner, in Lynnfield.

James P. King was severely injured last week by falling across a beam on the scaffold of his barn.

Last Thursday about 40 members of the Company C., 5th Regiment Association, left Peabody at two P. M., in two barges for the Relay House, Nahant. A fish supper was discussed at 6 P. M., and after supper a business meeting was held, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Robert S. Daniels; Vice-presidents, Manulas B. Leanord, Geo. F. Barnes; Secretary and Treasurer. Wm. H. Hildreth; Ex. Com., Wm. F. Pingree, Frank A. Pemberton, Wm. H. Hildreth, P. L. Winchester, Geo. F. Barnes, and Frank T. Arnold. It was voted to hold the next reunion at the same place, one year from date. The party left the Relay House about ten, and reached home before midnight.

At the Willows, last Sunday, there was a large number from our town and Salem, as well as from Lynn. The crowd was orderly and respectable. Not an intoxicated person was on the ground, that we could see. Shop girls who had been confined through the entire week, and who had taken this method of gaining necessary refreshment by a sojourn in the open air, and clerks in our stores and offices, were everywhere conspicuous. The Salem Cadet Band gave some of their choicest music in the latter part of the afternoon. As we listened we thought we never heard them play better. Salem and its vicinity is indeed favored in the possession of such an organization.

A great many women complain of their feet aching badly. There are many remedies. A change of shoes is a great rest to aching feet, so is a bath in either hot or cold water; brisk rubbing with a crash towel; lying down for a few minutes rest; laying them up on another chair, or even a rubbing with a dry towel: bending the toes this way and that with the hands, and sometimes a rubbing with salt and water or vinegar and water. No wonder our faithful old travelers who have stuck to us through thick and thin, and through all seasons and times and places, do grow weary in obeying our wishes.

The following are the routes of the steamer "Empire State" from Battery wharf, Boston, for the remainder of this week: To-morrow (Thursday), Provincetown, at 9.30 A. M., landing for one hour; Friday, to the mouth of the Merrimack, giving views in passing of Newburyport, Plum Island and Salisbury Beach; Saturday, Out to Sea, following the course of the vessels bound for Europe, and passing out of sight of land. Fishing trips every Monday.

Attention is called to the new advertisement of M. A. Davidson, the Lynn Music Store, and to the fact that all kinds of pianos, organs, or any kind of musical instrument can be obtained there at Boston prices. The warerooms of this store are extensive, and both New York and Boston pianos are kept. It will pay our musical people to look in at the store when in Lynn.

The Fair of the New England Manufacturers' and Mechanics' Institute, will open in Boston Sept. 5th, 1883, and continue open till Nov. 3d. It promises to be one of the best ever held in New England, and besides the usual attractions, will have a foreign department, as well as a department for women.

If any of our readers desire a fine door plate, or any work in engraving, they will do well to call on J. W. Hazelton, No. 288 Essex street, Salem, with Daniel T. Smith, jeweler. Mr. Hazelton is a careful workman, and will guarantee satisfaction.

Ex-Collector Simmons is to have a post of honor in the democratic state convention. This is well. The republican party will have to meet the issue of the hour. Butlerism must go.—Springfield Republican.

Hotel Nahant is now supplied with water from Lynn. This will prove a great convenience to the Messrs. Soule, who are now fully equipped to meet the wants of their patrons.

The Lynn & Boston railroad company have placed another new car upon their road this week and have four more in their shops at Chelsea in process of completion.

The White Mountain Excursion rates of the Boston, Concord and Montreal R. R. will be found in another column, and will be of interest to our readers.

We can conscientiously and boldly say to our readers who visit the Willows that there is no better place to get a fish dinner than at the Pavilion. We know whereof we speak. Mr. Davis, the new proprietor, is receiving much praise from his patrons, and those who go once to the Pavilion go again. A regular fish cook has been engaged, all meals are cooked to order, the broiled blue fish is smoking hot, while fried nippers, clams and lobster are brought on by the waiters just "in the nick of time." And just here let us say that the waiters are all young ladies, accustomed to hotel service, and Mr. Davis will consider it a favor if any patron who is not satisfactorily served will report the fact to him personally. It is his aim to suit the people who resort to the Willows, and the number of large parties who are dining at the Pavilion is proof positive that he is succeeding.

A barn belonging to Horatio Perry, of Danvers, was entirely consumed by fire yesterday morning. In the barn were fifty tons of hay, twelve cows, six horses (one of which was gotten out very badly burned), one yoke of oxen, and a large amount of farming implements. The piggery contained fourteen pigs, all being burned to a crisp. The total loss is $5500, on which there is an insurance of $1800. The fire is thought to be the work of an incendiary. The remains of the burned stock were removed to Ames' rendering works yesterday. Six of the cows which were burned were valued at $500 and Mr. Perry had recently refused an offer of $100 for one of them.

THOSE WHO USE IT, SAY

No subject of importance has been neglected in the People's Cyclopedia.—Portland (Me.) Press.

I use The People's Cyclopedia constantly. I should take it in preference to any other popular work. Z. A. SMITH, of Editorial Staff of Boston Journal.

I have formed a very high opinion of The People's Cyclopedia, based upon knowledge derived from daily use. THOS. DREW, Literary Ed. Boston Herald.

Before examining The People's Cyclopedia, I could not conceive how so good a work could be made. I can not now imagine how a better one can be made. S. W. MASON, LL. D., Supervisor Schools, Boston.

I deem it an admirable work. It covers the field of knowledge effectively, and gives just that information which all want. In short, it is just the book for reading, thinking Americans. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Brooklyn.

I have given an examination to The People's Cyclopedia, and find that it answers what I believe to be the want of a work of that class. I can recommend it for the office and for the use of the business men of the country. BENJ. F. BUTLER Gov.

When I had finished a careful examination of The People's Cyclopedia, I decided to purchase it, although I already possessed the Britannica, American and Johnson's Universal. Each of these great works has merits peculiarly its own, but it may, in my judgment, be truly said of The People's, that it furnishes more information for the money than any work extant. Col. JOHN D. WASHBURN, Worcester, Mass.

A valuable book for practical use. It is full of things which we want to know but cannot readily get access to. J. W. PATTERSON, Ex-U. S. Senator and Supt. Pub. Schools, N. H.

I am especially pleased with its freshness and accuracy, its brevity and clearness of statement, and at the same time its fulness and completeness, making it, in my opinion, the most convenient and usable of all Cyclopedias before the public. I deem it an especially valuable work for teachers and for school libraries, and heartily recommend its purchase. N. A. LUCE, State Supt. of Schools, Maine.

A Shadow In The Valley.

There's a shadow in the valley,
  Where the lilies lie asleep,
Where the laughing waters murmur
  And the sweet-flags droop and weep.
There's a shadow in the valley,
  And a sigh floats in the air,
Like the breath of angels resting
  O'er the fair scene mirrored there.

Such a shadow in the valley
  Brings a burden to my heart;
Can not you, too, understand it?
  Have you never felt it smart?
I have watched the lilies dying,
  I have seen the sweet-flags weep,
And have wished that I, when dying,
  Might be laid with them to sleep.

I have heard the breezes murmur
  Low, soft songs within this vale;
I have seen the black birds hover
  O'er the lilies fair and pale;
I have seen a ray of sunlight
  Linger 'mid the reeds at play,
But the silent, creeping shadow
  Chased the memory sprite away.

Like the human heart o'ershadowed
  By a sorrow swift and deep,
Like the sweet-flags and the lilies
  In the shadow-vale asleep,
There's a melancholy sweetness
  In the perfume-laden air,
And the tall reeds seem to whisper
  "You'll find sorrow everywhere."

Beyond The Mountains.

Beyond the mountains—ah! beyond
  How fair in fancy gleams
The valley with its spreading fields,
  The glint of winding streams!
Beyond the purple mountain's hight
  Stray all our happy dreams.

We sit beneath the moaning pine,
  By waves that pass our door;
We say, this scene is fair, and yet
  We sigh for something more;
And long to pass with eager feet
  The far-off mountains o'er.

At eve the night bird faintly sings,
  In murmurs sweet and low;
The new moon's slender crescent gives
  The sky a tender glow.
How fair the stars, how warm the wind,
  How soft the river's flow!

But there, where longing fancy flies,
  And wayward hearts still turn,
A deeper music charms the soul,
  The red stars brighter burn;
And laughing streams go leaping down
  From nooks o'erhung with fern.

When heavy clouds above us roll,
  Blue skies are over there;
When storm-winds fret around our eaves,
  There zephyrs whisper fair.
Beyond the mountains—ah! beyond
  Love fills the sunny air.

The Song Of A Shell.

BY WINIFRED P. BALLARD.

My little one, with ear attent
  And rosy lips apart,
I pray thee tell, what magic spell
The sound within this fragile shell,
  Is weaving round thy heart.

It murmurs of the ocean grand,
  Strange fancies of the sea,
Of fairy home, beneath the foam,
Where mermaids gay, with glass and comb,
  Are gliding merrily.

It tells of pearls and mosses green;
  Of coral islands fair;
Of birds that rest, with snowy breast,
On sailing ships or billows' crest,
  Or skim through sunny air.

It speaks of storms and lashing waves,
  Of monsters fierce and grim,
Of sunken gold and jewels old,
And wrecks of many a vessel bold
  In caverns weird and dim.

Whispers it nothing low, my child,—
  This shell from the ocean strand,
Of One who guides each ship that rides
And holds the winds and waves and tides
  In the hollow of his hand?

Good Cheer.

Selected Story.

Love That Liveth Not In Looks.

'Do you really admire that little brown girl, Basil?'

'Indeed I do; I think she is the most cosy little creature I have seen; true, she has not her cousin's dash and style, neither can she be called a beauty, but she is quiet and good and womanly—the sort of a woman to rest a man after he leaves the work-day world for the sweet repose of domestic quiet.'

Basil Holman's earnest, handsome face brightened as he spoke. He and his friend Bob Drury were watching a game of lawn tennis. The girl in question had pushed her velvet jockey cap off her low, square forehead. Truly she was not a beauty, yet there was that which was better than beauty in her face—'soul.' She had a pretty, trim figure, tiny feet, close curling hair, uneven features, a brown skin, and great steel eyes that contrasted strangely with her dark complexion. Every one voted Violet Dering a jolly, good-natured little soul; and some there were who read below the surface, and saw in her the nobility of white-souled womanhood.

A pleasant party was gathered at Darlington vicarage to celebrate Vi's coming of age. She was an only child, and was greatly beloved at home and abroad. Vi's cousin Lottie, a splendid blonde, was fresh from her first season. She seemed quite awe-inspiring to the quiet country folks; she had electrified them by her stylish costume and quiet airs. Vi looked on her as perfection.

After a splendid game the guests took tea in the grassy orchard that ran around the back of the vicarage. It was a wonderful old place, full of well-ladened trees, that made scented shade for the young folks who were very merrily pelting one another with cherries. Vi was busy attending to the comforts of others, but Lottie held a little court of admirers under a big pear tree.

When tea had been removed, the young folks divided into groups and discussed the evening's entertainment. There was music, dancing under a great white tent, boating on the smooth lake, or cards in the cool, old-fashioned parlor. Most of the party swarmed to the tent, and just when the moon lightened all it touched with the light of heaven, the band struck up 'Sweethearts,' and soon the flying feet of light-footed youth beat time to the dreamy measures of the music.

Basil Holman danced with Vi, and looked into the clear depths of her clear, bright eyes.

Lottie, seeing her cousin dancing with the only man in the room whom wealth and position made it worth while winning, inwardly determined to nip the flirtation in the bud. It did not seem credible that the best parti of the season should be enamored of a plain little country girl. She was engaged to dance the next set with him, and made up her mind to see how far interested his affections were.

Basil, with a whisper that brought the love-light to Vi's eyes, and a vivid blush to her cheeks, left her to claim Lottie, who greeted him with the well trained 'army' of her eyes.

'I had no idea my cousin could dance so well, Mr. Holman. I am sure that you must have enjoyed your dance with her very much.'

'Indeed I did, she is such a jolly little girl, so unobtrusively clever and interesting; you ought to be very proud of her, Miss Dering.'

'Yes, I am fond of Vi; she is such a docile childish girl one would be hard-hearted to resist her affections. Do you think her good-looking?'

'Yes, in the best sense of the term, for she is pretty, and looks good. Our set is forming; let me take you to the other end of the tent, we shall have your cousin vis-a-vis.

Lottie bit her lip, but raised no objection to his arrangement. During the dance she managed very cleverly to make it seem that Basil was paying her a great deal of attention.

Vi felt her heart sink, and only a moment before she had been so happy. That night Lottie, who shared her room, said with an affectionate kiss, 'Vi, you mustn't let Basil Holman interest you too much; he is an audacious flirt, and is only trifling with you as he has with others, to cast aside and laugh at you.'

The barbed arrow struck home, and long after Lottie slept, Vi lay wide awake, with hot, despairing eyes and a heartache that seemed to choke her. She fought a fierce battle with herself that night, and arose changed from happy, thoughtless girlhood to a self-contained and suffering woman. Lottie looked at her keenly, then kissed her approvingly. There was something in her cousin's looks that promised her plans success.

After this Basil wondered at the change in his girl-love. But she no longer looked into his eyes with answering love, nor seemed so glad whenever he sought her society. 'Contrariwise,' she seemed to shun him. In vain Lottie, a finished coquette and a splendidly-beautiful woman, tried to cast her 'glamor' about him. He shook off her witcheries as the wind does the dew-drops, and yearned the more for his sweet Violet.

One calm Sabbath he determined to try his fate. It was a sultry summer noontide, and Vi, believing herself alone in the church where she was organist, sat long after the service, playing divine melodies that seemed to give her heart ease. Basil, sitting in the sunshine, felt from his heart spring up a little prayer that flew to heaven as quickly as a bird: 'God give me my pure sweetheart,' and as if to answer the prayer the music ceased, and Vi came down from the organ loft with a light in her eyes that spoke of peaceful thoughts. She started when she came face to face with her heart's lord, and a painful flush blotted out the brightness of her looks as she said:

'I had no idea you had not gone home with the others.'

'I stayed to walk back with you; I want to speak to you, dear, here before God's altar—speak to you as I never spoke to woman before, for oh! I love you, and want you to be my wife. Give me my answer here. I cannot wait, my heart is all athirst. Be kind to me, Violet.'

He had taken her trembling hands, and looked with heart-yearning into the pure heaven of her eyes; and she, true heart, told her answer by her looks; and he, with almost reverent love, laid his first kiss on her lips.

'You love me, darling; I can see it in those dear eyes; say you will give yourself to me.'

'I will be your wife if you really wish it, and are sure it will be for your happiness, for I love you with the one love of my life.'

'Vi, you have made me intensely happy. If the whole devotion of a life can repay you for the blessed gift of your good love, I will repay you. Come out into the sunshine, sweet; I feel as if the whole world were not wide enough to contain my happiness.'

Together they went through the cornfields and talked of their future—such a wonderful future it was to be, as pictured by a love which all the frosts of life could not chill, nor the fires of life destroy.

Lottie, seeing their confident and gladdened looks, felt her heart sink with a strange sensation of defeat. Jealousy roused all the worst of her nature into hot rebellion. The lovers had one happy day together, and Basil was closeted with the vicar next morning, when he left for town with bright spirits, promising to return in a few days. Lottie heard of the engagement with hidden anger, then went away to walk to the village to match some silks she wanted for embroidery. Coming to the village she was met by the doctor, a clever, hard-working fellow, who had a worshipful admiration for the London belle. He shook hands, saying:

'Miss Dering, I am glad I have met you, for my time is precious. I was just coming up to the vicarage to warn Miss Violet against coming as usual to the almshouses to read to-day; small-pox has broken out in its worst form, and I fear the infection for her. You will hasten back won't you, to warn her?'

'Of course! Dear me, how awful! I've a dread of the scourge myself, so I'll turn back.'

She turned back as she said she would, but instead of going by the highway and across the meadows—a short cut—she took the long, pleasant path through the woods, and arrived at the vicarage at luncheon-time, looking very haggard and white.

Her uncle said at sight of her:

'Why, what's the matter? You look as if you'd met a ghost.'

'I have met something more dangerous than that, uncle. I have met Dr. Hastings, fresh from attending a small-pox patient. That dreadful disease has broken out in the parish. Vi must not go to her poor people to-day.'

Mr. Dering turned very pale, and then said:

'God will guard her. She started away after you, hoping to catch up, she said. It is too late now to prevent her paying her usual visits.'

When Vi's father met her wearily coming through the meadows, she started from him, saying:

'Papa, dear, don't touch me till I have bathed and changed my clothes. I have been where there is small pox. I am not afraid for myself—I am young and strong—but I am afraid for you.'

A fortnight later Vi fell ill. Basil was back, and had spent a pleasant week with her. On hearing his darling was ill, he resolutely took up his abode in the house, half heart-broken by his little girl's danger.

Lottie had gone back to town directly she found her cousin was likely to take the complaint.

Poor little Vi went near to dying. When she was past the crisis she wrote a line to her lover, releasing him from his engagement, because, she said, she had grown so awful to look upon, and he for answer walked straight into the room she occupied and said:

'Darling, do you not know that my love does not live on looks? You have a beauty of heart and mind that cannot die; that is what feeds my love. I come to tell you that I shall claim my wife directly she is strong enough to travel to the beautiful lakes.'

Lottie heard the news of her cousin's marriage, and it seemed to blight her, for she suddenly fell ill, and of that disease which most of all she dreaded. Three months later she, scarred beyond all beauty, went down to the dear old vicarage to get strong again, a repentant and almost heart-broken woman, poor and without beauty. What was she to make of her life?

Her uncle welcomed her kindly, and tried to make her contented by leading her thoughts above herself; but as the soul awakened so her sorrow increased.

She was morbidly sensitive about her disfigurement, said it was a judgment upon her, and grew so fragile that her uncle called in medical help.

Dr. Hastings' heart ached at the change in his idol, but his presence did her good, for she unburdened all the remorseless bitterness of her weak heart to him, and gained comfort by his grave assurance of forgiveness from heaven. He was shocked by her confession, but his love grew stronger now he knew her need of it, and when the snow whitened the world about them, he took her to him, a humbled and better woman than she had ever been had beauty been left her to destroy the gentler part of her. A year later she met her cousin at a flower show. Vi had quite got back her good looks, and was tenderly compassionate of Lottie, because she imagined herself in part to blame for her disfigurement. Every kind word of hers struck to Lottie's soul, and in a repentant mood she told of the cruel delay on her part that led to Vi's illness.

'I could have saved you, but did not because of my cruel jealousy; can you forgive me?'

'I can, dear, and be grateful to you, for through my illness I knew that my husband's love did not live on looks. You should be grateful, too, dear, for misfortune found a true heart for you. Here come both our husbands; such love as theirs lives unstained by all the scars of life. That thought should be our happiness.'

A Caterer on Meat.—Fresh meat of every description should be hung up in a dry, cool place, and carefully wiped every day. It ought never to lay long in a dish. The time it should be kept varies with the weather—in cold, dry weather it will keep fresh much longer than in moist, warm weather. Game will keep longer than butcher meat—say, two weeks—birds being kept with the feathers on, but not drawn, and venison and rabbits paunched, but not skinned. Beef will require from four to ten days' keeping, or even longer in cold weather; and mutton, if well managed, will sometimes hang a fortnight or three weeks without spoiling—the longer the better. As young meat, however—veal, lamb and mutton—spoil very quickly, one, two or three days at the utmost suffices for it. Fowls will keep for a week and turkeys a fortnight, but a goose not above nine or ten days. In plucking birds which have been kept some time, care should be taken not to break the skin, which will have become rather tender. As all animal food, however good the quality and however well it may be cooked, is uneatable, stale, and except fish, will certainly prove tough if cooked too fresh, it becomes a matter of considerable difficulty, particularly during summer, to fix upon the right day for cooking a piece of meat which has been kept. It is only by daily examination and narrowly watching the change which meat under-goes that the housewife will be able to make use of it at that stage, just short of being tainted, which is the proper one at which to cook it.

This is an art which can only be learned by experience, and its successful practice evinces considerable skill in household management. Thus, should unlooked for cold weather have prevented the meat reaching the proper cooking state upon the day calculated on, the prudent and active housewife will have to provide some other dinner for that day and keep the meat till the next day or the next again. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon housekeepers that even the best meat, if cooked too soon, will not be nearly as tender and palatable as meat much inferior which has been kept the proper time. There are various ways of keeping meat sweet, and of removing the bad smell after it has become slightly tainted. One mode is to rub it over with coarsely pounded charcoal which has the property of absorbing the putrescent gases, and thus prevents the bad smell. The charcoal must, of course be washed off before cooking. Another way is to paint the meat all over with a solution of salicylic acid, or rubbing the meat with the dry acid is the simplest method, and will do for all household purposes.—The Caterer.

When we sit down and read to the wife of our bosom one of our tenderest, sweetest, smoothest, purest, prettiest, gushingest pieces of poetry, and turn our tearful eyes to hers for sympathy, to hear her say, "Yes, love, but did I tell you Mary's baby had the measles?" makes us so sad that we want to go out to Dakota and live a life of celibacy with the prairie dogs and jack-rabbits. And when this same consistent angel shows us a hand-worked "tidy" which has taken her two weeks to make, and used up several miles of twine almost good enough for fishing lines, and expects us to gush with admiration, we feel that there's a screw loose in the female organism somewhere.—The Argus.

What do the "veteran comrades" of Gen. Butler have to say to his assumption that a nod from him is all that would be necessary to insure the "cleaning out of this state house?" Is their loyalty to their "old commander" so strong that they would constitute themselves into a mob at his command? The intimation is an insult, and the menace to a legislative committee, that the governor might undertake to play the role of Cromwell, was sufficient cause to stop the hearing. The people will attend to "cleaning out the state house" next November.—Boston Herald.

The story is told that a gentleman was expecting to receive a despatch from Boston the other day stating that a young lady relative was coming on to visit his family. He received the despatch, and it read: "Mary cannot come. She has a child." He was astounded and telegraphed for an explanation, which came thus: "She has had another child." This time his request for an explanation was more explicit. It brought the needed correction from the green telegraph operator: "For child read chill."—Wall Street News.

The removal of the newspaper stand from the side of the Eastern railroad passenger station in Boston into the center of the building, and the reconstruction of the ticket office, is a great improvement, as much needed room for the accommodation of the passengers is thereby secured; but it is still a puzzle how the Eastern manages to do such an immense business, especially during the days of summer travels in quarters so limited.

One Sunday night, a female domestic, while gaping in bed, put her under jaw out of place to such a degree that a physician had to be called to re-arrange the machinery, which was finally accomplished after an expenditure of much strength by the professional gentleman and an assistant, and the victim of too inordinate gaping is happy in the knowledge that she can once more tell the news. We omit any attempt at puns which might suggest themselves.—Milford Journal.

In his young days Noah Webster had a pretty love romance, a magazine writer tells us. Unlike most disappointed swains he did not turn to puerile poetry for relief. It took a whole dictionary to express his feelings.—Globe.

The Summer Resort Dog.

"Dost keep a dog?" asked a dusty tourist, as he walked up to the counter of a summer resort hotel and prepared to enter his name, and looked at the cool clerk.

"We dost," said the clerk, as he used his handkerchief to flirt with a girl with a cheese cloth dress on, who sat on the veranda in such a manner that the bug worked on the instep of her stocking would show.

"That settles it," said the tourist, and he was gone. A newspaper man who was near, and who was looking for an item, stopped the tourist and asked him to take a drink, and as they leaned over the bar the pump was put to work, and the tourist said:

"This is my second year summer resorting, and if I live till September it will be a streak of luck. I have only slept two hours a night for two weeks, and I have been to nine different places. Do you know, I think hotel men are mighty big fools. They spend thousands of dollars advertising, to get people to come to their hotels, and often in one day they undo all the good they have done by advertising, and put out upon the road dozens of walking advertisements, who will tell what a big liar the advertiser is. I went to a house last week which is situated on the bank of a lake, a most beautiful sheet of water, and every thing looked lovely. I retired at ten o'clock, for a good country sleep. The bed was hard, the bed clothes smelled frowy, and the carpet was dirty, but I turned in. Just as I got sleepy the landlord sat down on the veranda near my room, with half a dozen guests that were full of beer, and they talked and told stories until after midnight, until I was wild. The guests went to bed, and the landlord, who had to remain awake, and wanted company, corraled a couple of dudes who had just returned from a dance at another hotel, and they talked, till two o'clock. I got my grip-sack packed, and was going to leave, when they all went to bed, and all was quiet. Then I was going to sleep, when a dog that had been lying on the steps waiting for his turn to come, began to bark. Well, what on earth that dog found to bark at, I couldn't tell. I got up and looked out, and everything was quiet, and there was nothing to cause a dog to bark. The dog saw me, as I opened the blind, in my night robe, and he wagged his tail as though he had done as he would be done by, and he actually seemed to think he had done me a favor. I called him in my room and gave him the remains of a lunch of cold chicken which I had in my lunch basket, and he seemed to think he had struck a soft thing. I thought that a dog always laid down to sleep after a hearty meal, and I let him out, and went to bed. Do you know that dog began barking right where he left off, and kept it up for two hours? I would open the window and throw a chair at the dog, and he would act tickled, and look for another chair. He seemed to think I was playing with him, and he kept barking. After I had thrown all the chairs, the dog looked sad, and then he went down the steps to the gravel walk and began to howl. O, how he did howl! I am a little superstitious about a dog howling, and I wasn't in a very good frame of mind, but the dog finally let his howl die out, and I was just getting into a drowse, when an expressman came along and tumbled a two hundred pound trunk on the veranda. Well, it sounded like a cannon, and I got up and looked at my watch and it was four o'clock in the morning, and I had not slept a wink. By that time a milk wagon came along, ringing a bell, and the porter came and pounded on the doors of three other guests who wanted to get up for an early train, and a 'bus came around and the driver yelled 'all-aboard,' and I got up and took a walk before breakfast."

"Well, you did have a hard time. But the breakfast made up for it all, didn't it?" asked the newspaper man.

"Made up for nothing. Now, you may think I am a kicker, but I am not. I can get along with good coffee and bread and butter for breakfast, and be happy. But, O, what coffee that was. It was terrible. And the butter! Say, there was a creamery within two miles of that hotel, where they make as fine butter as a man ever saw, and every farmer within twenty miles sells splendid butter, and yet the butter on the table of that summer hotel, which I had seen advertised as the finest in the west, was not fit to grease a wagon. The landlord must have hunted all over the country to find butter as poor as that. Why, that butter would advertise his hotel as a fraud louder than all the gilt edged advertising he could do in a whole season in favor for his place. No person would ever go there again, so I say such a landlord has not got sense."

"What do you think is the reason landlords do not make efforts to retain customers, after they once get them?" asked the newspaper man.

"O, many of them do, but some seem to think if they slap a guest on the shoulder, and say, 'How are you Jim,' it is enough, and the guest will feel at home. But I tell you a man don't feel at home unless he can sleep and have something good to eat. Some of them make a great mistake in catering more to a few dudes and dudesses who come from the cities to attend a Saturday night dance, than they do to guests that would stay all the season. They will allow these temporary visitors to run the house all night, and gallop up and down the verandas, and sing, until people who are trying to sleep get so disgusted they will leave on Monday. But the dog nuisance is the worst, and a landlord who will keep dogs about a summer resort, to bark all night, makes a mistake. Say, why wouldn't it be a good idea for guests to carry a little strychnine for dogs. By George, I never thought of that. Is there a drugstore near here?" And the tourist started for a drugstore.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—I read the letter headed 'In Camp' which appeared in your last issue with much pleasure, for it brought back recollections of my own life in the woods, after having almost forgotten my youthful exploits in the camping line.

Some how or other I could rarely go to camp without some misfortune befalling me. Usually I had good luck, so far as sport was concerned, but some ludicrous mishap would invariably dampen all the poetry of camp life. When I was younger I went into the woods each year and sometimes remained a month in the wilderness; but of late years, age compels me to stay at home. I had just finished my freshman year at Harvard when I was first stricken with camping fever. Go I must and go I did. I intended to be gone a month; and I came home inside of four days, my face covered with white flakes of cuticle, and with a most potent dread of isolation, to boot.

I well remember one summer's trip to the woods: I went into camp two days before my companions who were to join me. I had one fair day in which to clean out the camp and do a little fishing, and then it began to rain.

I rather enjoyed the idea of a shower at first, but as my bump of continuity was not large the patter, patter soon grew monotonous. The sky became dull and leaden with the wind from the east, and a genuine storm set in. A drop of water upon my head relieved the monotony and set me to wonder if the cabin would leak. Another and still another drop and then a succession of drops, and I moved myself only to realize that there were manifestations of moisture everywhere. As the roof became wet so did the floor and my blankets. Seeking shelter beneath the table I underwent another and distinct edition of wetting, as that in turn became soaked. Moisture permeated everything. A string of trout hanging from a nail by the door was imbrued to a new life. A fish gave a weak flap, and before long the whole lot seemed one succession of flaps.

I recollect that I compared this new life with that twitching of the human body after death, when connected with a powerful battery. I wasn't invigorated at all. The cold water trickled down my back, and my wet clothes clung to my shivering body as if I had been immersed in some powerful paste. As the water found its way into my gum boots, and gradually filled them, my spirits declined proportionally and I bewailed my lot. At last an idea entered my head. I threw my coat upon the deal table, and covered it with about a wheelbarrow load of dirt which I scraped up with the frying-pan, and under this impromptu, but effective shelter, I drew my cold, cramped body. How it did pour! The inside of the roof was fairly afloat with water, and as the shanty was banked on the outside I soon found myself seated in a coffee-colored puddle, with the prospect of being washed out. In every conceivable place where water could cling, it did cling until it could get good headway and then it would dash to the floor and start anew.

My sugar became syrup and my meal settled into hasty pudding. I was disgusted and in despair. To fall into an ice-covered river is nothing beside having a raw north easter concentrated over ones unprotected head for twenty-four hours. I suffered perfect misery. At last the rain ceased and when the sun lightened the clouds, I started for home. In the depot I met my friends on their way to join me, and after getting a new lot of provisions, we returned to camp and remained nearly three weeks.

"What makes you look so blue?" said Pat to Mike. "Begorra, an' you'd look blue, too, if you came home and found your wife in bed with spinal meningitis." "Be hevins! I'd uv shot the bloody Italian!"

A particularly smart Philadelphia clerk has put out the sign, "Trade dollars of 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882 and 1883 taken at $1.17." No such pieces were issued in the years named, and the silly joke only seems to confuse ignorant men and women.

Summer Clothes.

Some writer in an exchange who has been studying up the subject, and looks at it from a scientific standpoint, says the popular idea that light clothes are cooler for summer wear than dark is altogether wrong, and that dark clothes are very much cooler that light. This is a stab at the time honored linen suit, and should be frowned down at once. The linen costume has been handed down through generations in all its original beauty, and retains its hollow, flabby appearance, and wrinkles, and general frigid style, that time, or flat irons, or flannel underclothes cannot erase. A suit of linen clothes on a man makes him look like the sign of a "Yan kee" in front of a "notion" store, or like an icicle dressed in pants, and no one ever saw a more thoroughly dejected appearing man, and one who looks to much as though he had lost his last friend, and was afraid to look anyone squarely in the face, as does the man who comes out for the first time in the summer with his last season's suit of linen clothes. He seems to feel that the whole world and a large portion of New York state are staring at him with field glasses, and it makes him so nervous he trembles. He generally puts on the clothes in the heat of the day, right after dinner, and he is half way down town before he begins to realize the predicament he is in, and then he grits his teeth firmly together, and determines to wade through, and pay no attention to the gaping throng. Each and every separate and distinct wrinkle that was left in the pants from the day he wore the clothes the season before, or has accumulated during the winter, stand out prominently; the green landscape sketch that he found on the seat of the pants last season, and which refused to come out when persuaded by soap and rubbing, looms up now on the back breadth, and the coat, which seems to have shrunk up in the back at least a foot, refuses to come down and hide the green placque on the hurricane deck of the pants. One leg of the pants he finds has shrunk about six inches and is gradually climbing towards his knee, while the heat of the sun, the dampness of the rain, or the wash-tub seems to have no effect upon the other leg except to twist it around to the front, and both legs bag at the knees and bind at the ankles and bulge out in spots whenever the air fills them, until the legs of the unfortunate wearer look like a string of these sectional sausages. Then there is the linen duster. No man ever bought a linen duster who could explain to even his own satisfaction, the next day after he bought it, what on earth he wanted of it anyway. There are more scarecrows and tramps throughout this country to-day that are wearing linen dusters and a look of woe, than half the people think for. It is seldom that a man is found in a public place twice in one season with a linen suit of clothes on. One day's wear seems to be enough for the average man. The white summer hat, the white vest, the low shoe and clocked stockings may be all right for light summer wear, and white pants hold their own pretty well, but linen clothes and the linen duster are a hollow mockery, and some one will yet fall upon the manufacturers of linen suits and wreak a terrible vengeance for all this suffering. A good pair of close fitting double-barrel gun bags beat a pair of linen pants all out for style, and don't attract so much attention.—Peck's Sun.

He was a meek and a humble-looking man, wearing a stand-up collar and a white tie, and seeming to be always on the point of giving out his text. After clearing his throat and hesitating a while, he suddenly asked:

"If I had a margin up on Wabash, and if Wabash should go down, down, down, do you think that faith and prayers would have any effect?"

"My dear sir," replied the man in the white hat, as he came to a standstill in his walk, "if you had a margin up on Wabash at, say 50 cents, and it went down to 40, all the faith and prayers you could dump into a hundred-acre lot wouldn't save you from putting up more, or being closed out."

Don't you believe in the virtue of prayer, sir?"

"Not in a business way on Wabash—no, sir. If you are thinking of buying stock, sir, be ready with your margins, look out for roorbacks, watch the tickers, and hire some cheap man to do all the praying away back in some cheap town. Don't give him over 75 cents per day, and make up your mind at the start that it's money thrown away."—Wall Street News.

It is the New York Sun that can say; "The shell shaped straw hat meets with only a limited amount of popularity." "Limited amount of popularity" shows to what an abuse the word "amount" must submit. Amount does not express "degree," and in the Sun's sentence it is ridiculous surplusage. "A limited popularity" is correct, while "amount of popularity" is an error for which a school-boy ought to be punished.—Provincetown Exchange.

Miscellaneous.

TOO MANY SALOONS.—"The fact is," said a prominent member of the Church Temperance Society, of New York City, "all classes drink too much. From the gilded saloons up-town and down-town, where costly works of art hang on the walls, adorn the parlors and make attractive the scene, to the lowest dive in Cherry street or the meanest hole in Chatham street, the lesson may be drawn. Who, for instance, could exaggerate the scenes born of intemperate use of alleged 'wine' in the wine rooms of our great masquerade balls? There is not a gin mill in the city where drunken men are not manufactured daily. Murder, lust, disorder of all kinds, find their inspiration at the public bar, and it is intemperate use of liquor at public bars which the society hopes to stop. One particularly good feature is the society's interest in the boys of to-day—the men of to-morrow."

"But boys don't drink?"

"Don't they, though? Go down town and see the boys from fourteen to nineteen, clerks in offices and stores, at lunch. They not only drink, but they guzzle. Follow them to the theatre at night; see where they go between the acts. Poisoning the air with what in their gullibility they call 'tobacco' and stenching the neighborhood with their nasty cigarettes, they rush in droves to the nearest gin mill, drink their brandy, whisky or gin and seltzer, and take another 'stink weed' for their nerves. Perhaps they don't consider themselves boys, but in the eye of the law and common sense they are boys 'all the same,' and very silly boys at that. To meet the case of these boys in coachmen's coats and toothpick shoes will be an earnest effort in the work of the society, and, further than this, it will take cognizance of the smaller boys who also drink."

"What! Smaller boys drink! Nonsense!"

"Let us see how much 'nonsense' there is in the assertion. In the first report put out by the Citizens' Law and Order League of Massachusetts, it was stated that nearly all dealers in intoxicating liquors in the City of Boston sell to minors to drink on the premises, and also to very little children to carry home. In one saloon visited by officers of the society, twenty boys under fifteen were found drinking, and in another thirty boys between sixteen and eighteen. Of thirty-six cases of infringement of law prosecuted within a few weeks, twenty-one were for selling drink to minors. What future can be expected of these boys, and what must be the effect upon the little children who habitually meet the sights and sounds of the liquor saloons when they go to fetch liquor for their parents? It has been stated that ninety-five per cent. of the vicious youths of our country come from homes where there has been excessive drinking, and there is no reason to doubt the truth of this estimate."

If one wishes to see railroading in its most primitive style he should go to the island of Nantucket. Here is a little narrow-gauge road, connecting the town proper with the settlement at Surf Side. It is related that when the road started, a few years ago, it was customary to flag approaching trains whenever a team appeared in sight of the track. It is also said that it was impossible to run on schedule time, from the fact that the engineer was frequently obliged to alight and drive stray hens from the rails. But we will not vouch for the truth of this statement.—Manufacturers' Gazette.

E. B. Phillips, who nearly a year ago resigned the presidency of the Eastern Railroad to take the presidency of the Toledo, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad to build up its waning fortunes, has sent in his resignation, as the load was more than he could carry. By late quotations the stock has declined to 2 1-2, with too many sellers for the buyers. There is said to be over $200,000 par value of this stock held in Lynn.

The following episode took place at a White Mountain hotel last week: Mrs. A. who is of a jealous turn, to Miss B., who is no longer in the heyday of youth: "Why, Miss B., was it you I saw talking so confidentially with my husband on the piazza this morning? I thought it was some young lady and began to be quite jealous, but I feel quite relieved to find it was only you."

"See here, landlord, didn't you advertise an entire absence of flies and mosquitoes at this place?" "Certainly, sir; but those advertisements were prepared in March, and I assure you in the most solemn manner that we were not troubled in the least until the last of May. If you had only come up here in April you would have had a glorious time.—Detroit Free Press.

Josh Billings says: "When a young man ain't good for anything else, I like tew see him carry a gold-headed cane. If he can't buy a cane, let him part his hair in the middle."

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

LAST WEEK we alluded to the difference in wages between the telegraph operators and laborers in the various trades of the country. The sympathy of most of the merchants and of the press has been with the strikers in the contest, chiefly because the Western Union Co. has desired to keep the men on comparatively low wages, but has not cheapened its service to the public. The events of these two weeks, however, have shown that both sides need to make concessions. The telegraph company is doing better than the strikers would have the public believe, and the business men are finding out how easily they can dispense with the telegraph. Yet they are crippled and what few operators are at their post are evidently overworked. At the same time the company receives some accesssions and will receive more as time passes. Some of these men have families to support and we doubt if the labor organizations are in sufficient funds to support the strikers for an indefinite period.

The demand which is made by the operators is probably more than the company can pay. They would undoubtedly be willing to accept less, and the Western Union would doubtless be willing to pay more than they had previously done, if the old condition of things could be restored. There is probably no corporation or company, call them monopolists or what you will, who could submit to an increase of 33 per cent. on the wages of their employes. It is a fact that the purchasing power of labor is greater than a year ago; the price of corn, flour, and the necessaries of life, with few exceptions, is lower than it was a few years ago, with a still lower tendency. The same may be said of articles of wearing apparel, and nearly everything which the money of the laborer is required to purchase. Our manufacturers have not, as a rule, been making money. The closing of many of the mills on this account, the reduction of hours in some of the factories, throwing many laborers out of employment—all these things show that everything is tending toward a lower market, except the price of labor. Not only is labor as firm in its demands for wages equal to what was received before this downward tendency in the markets which we have mentioned, but it is even clamoring for more.

The recent failures in the leather and shoe trade will throw a large number of laborers out of employment. There are many things therewith connected, which have no reference to the labor question. But the tendency towards lower margins of profit, in many cases no profit at all, has not been without its effect. All things considered, the tendency of the markets, the increased purchasing power of money, lead to the opinion that concession must be made by the striking telegraph operators before harmony can be restored. If matters remain as they have, both sides will be very willing, it is likely, to concede something, for which the general public will be glad.

ONE OF the most disastrous results of the late failures in the leather trade is a lack of confidence on the part of money lenders and banking institutions, which ought to have come sooner. Before the failures a man with doubtful credit and not the best reputation for honorable dealing, could hire money with little difficulty. Now the honest man who always pays one hundred cents on a dollar, and whose reputation for straightforward business dealing has been unexceptional, will find it difficult to bridge over his immediate wants. This is one of the serious evils. The banks are spasmodic in their dealings with customers, in many cases. As long as everything goes smoothly, and they meet with no losses, the business public, which must have some credit in order to get along, is well accommodated. But let a crash of this kind come, and those who are in the best of financial standing are in many cases refused. This is but natural, and is one of the unfortunate secondary results of such failures.

There is another phase. There are business men, losers perhaps by the failures, who could with some difficulty and personal sacrifice meet their obligations, but who will avail themselves of the opportunity afforded by these suspensions to compromise with their creditors. Such was the case at the time of the great Boston fire. Such, to a limited extent, will be the case now. And the effect of such failures has a more disastrous effect, morally, than the larger ones which have preceded.

These events have also shown the need of a uniform Bankrupt law in the United States. Here again is the necessity of a few failures like that of Shaw Bros., to rouse the public and our business men, especially, to the urgency of such a law. The property of the firm is in New York, New Hampshire, Maine, Massachusetts and the Provinces. Our own state has probably the most just and equitable state bankrupt law of any that have been mentioned. But there is no uniformity in the different states, and it is more than probable that complications will arise, in the settlement, of great difficulty, and occasion much loss financially to the creditors. It is to be hoped that Congress when it meets again may be induced to give early attention to this matter. The failure should enforce the danger of manufactured notes, and "swapping paper" which has been too prevalent among business firms. It is surprising to notice the small amount of legalized indebtedness for merchandise which has been shown. There is no solid basis of finance to such proceedings. Failures in leather, also, are as bad as cotton failures or margins in railroad stocks, and in many cases equally as disastrous. There is no doubt that we shall have a clearer atmosphere, temporarily, at least.

VERY SOON after Gov. Butler was elected, it will be remembered that he alluded very sarcastically to Ex-Gov. Long's addresses on public occasions, stating in a very emphatic manner that his time would not be devoted to such occasions. How is it? In the State and out of it he has made as many of these addresses as any Governor.—More than this, the public business has been compelled to wait for his private business. It is not of great moment, but has Butler fulfilled his promise?

Has he accomplished anything in the matter of reform? Has anything been done by him that is not intended directly to influence his re-election? He has shown up abuses at Tewksbury which do not now exist, which have already been reformed, and under Republican administration. He has removed, indirectly, the Marshes. He has incurred an expense to the State in the investigation, nearly all of which could have been avoided. The removals at the Institution could have been effected by a few hours' converse in a proper spirit with the Board of Charities. The reform, if it may be so called, would have been accomplished, and expense saved the State.

He has prevented the re-nomination of Mr. Donelly, one of the ablest men on the Board of State Charities, representing the Catholics of the State, and has put in his stead a broken-down politician of doubtful ability, his only qualification, as far as we can understand, being that he is a staunch Butler man. It was much to the discredit of the Council that he was confirmed. If Mr. Donelly must be removed, a Catholic should have been put in his place, and this should have been insisted upon. Our state recognizes the poor of every nation, who have found here a home.—This is well. And on the Board should be found a representative of our adopted citizens of this faith, so large a number of whom are among us. Will the Catholic population rally to the support of a man who has so misrepresented them?

This is not all. He has insulted Miss O'Connell by the greatest insult to a woman—an attack upon her character. This, to a pure woman, is a stain which is often powerless in her to remove. Is this what is expected of the Chief Magistrate of Massachusetts? Imagine, for a moment, Gov. Butler's predecessor descending to such inuendoes. Is this what our law abiding citizens, democrats as well as republicans, would have our Governor engaged in?

Lucius Tuttle, general ticket agent of the Eastern railroad, who sends thousands of passengers to Mount Desert, White Mountains, Montreal, etc., says: "This year the boarding houses are doing the business; the hotels are behind. I attribute it to a bad year in Wall street or State street. The brokers are the best money spenders in the land. Their fullness or emptiness is the key to the prosperity of the best hotels."—Newburyport Herald.

In this vicinity it has been noted that the higher priced resorts have lacked the patronage dispensed last year. The tendency has been to get the most enjoyment out of the least money. This accounts for the popularity of the Willows—and it certainly is so. When seven hundred passengers can be transferred from the Lynn R. R. in one day—when on the same day four thousand people are congregated there, it is certainly the poor man's resort. The same may be said of Lynn Beach, a journey to which and return costs but twenty cents from this town. No wonder that such places find a harvest of patronage while the Point of Pines, with its costly hotels and expensive dinners, is thinly patronized, although the cost of transportation thither is but a trifle more. The same applies to the seashore and mountain hotels. There are few people who can afford the luxury of a hotel at five dollars a day for himself and family—at least for any length of time, especially when about the same amount per week will obtain comfortable quarters and more rest at a boarding house in the mountains.

We also imagine that Raymond's Excursions have contributed to this desire for lower prices. Raymond's tour expenses will average about five dollars per day, but in this are included the expenses by rail or boat, which brings the actual cost of living down to a reasonable figure. Many people are traveling this way, and when it is considered that the best hotels are visited, it is not to be wondered at.

THE ISSUING of the call for the Republican State Convention is usually the signal for some political activity in this State, and under the circumstances, it would excite great surprise if such was not the case. The apparent inactivity of the democratic party has led some journals to presume that Gen. Butler will hold to his expressed determination in his inaugural, not to be a candidate this fall. We suspect this suggestion and the further suggestion of the name of Charles P. Thompson, is a trick of the enemy. The democrats are aware that with no other man than Butler can they hope for victory. They are also aware that they cannot nominate him until he gives the word. He has them entirely in his power, and we might add at his mercy.

It is unwise for the Republican party to be misled by such thoughts as the retirement of Butler from the contest. It will put in nomination its strongest man as developed by the sense of the convention yet to be chosen. Mention has of course been made of several names, any one of whom, we believe could carry the full vote of the party of this State, and defeat Butler. But it is not a question of personal preference this year, but of the future good of the party in this state and in the country. Whether it be Lieut. Gov. Ames, Ex-Gov. Talbot, Senator Robinson, or any other of the men who have been thought of, is of not so much matter as that the party should be united and harmonious. This we are glad to learn, seems to be the object sought to be attained by the leaders and the press through the State. It is worth working for, and we feel confident that it will compensate in the end, for all the labors which may be put forth in the campaign which must of necessity be short, sharp and decisive.

William Reith, of Salem, father of William Reith, Jr., a well-known milliner of Salem, dropped dead, while carrying water to his son's cottage, at Asbury Grove, Hamilton, soon after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He was about 70 years of age, and a native of Peabody, where he carried on business as a stonemason for many years. He went to California during the gold excitement in 1849, and remained there for several years. Of late years he had resided with his son in Salem.

The effect of the telegraphers strike was clearly shown by the following account of the fire taken from the Boston Advertiser this morning: A barn in the rear of Frank Osborne's tannery, on Foster street, was burned last night, with one horse and 25 tons of hay. Loss, $2000; insured. A barn belonging to George Clerk, adjoining, was also burned. Loss, $1000; probably insured. Clerk's large morocco factory was saved with great difficulty.

Telegraph poles are exactly ten rods apart, and thirty-two of these poles consequently make a mile. In order to find out how fast a railway train is going, all that is necessary is to record the time, and when you have counted thirty-two telegraph poles, you will have gone a mile, and your watch will tell you the time taken to cover the distance.

It is estimated that the shifter daily shifts about one hundred cars from the heavy trains in the Peabody freight yards. The same engine makes three trips to Peabody in the course of twenty-four hours, and in the course of a month draws in the neighborhood of one hundred and fifty cars from Salem to Peabody.

One year ago yesterday the money order business was established at the post-office. There have been issued 930 orders and paid 247, the whole amounting to a little under $15,090. As the foreign order business has been lately put in operation here, the most of the business has been the issuing and paying of domestic orders. These figures indicate strongly that there was a need of the business.

A Somerville police sergeant captured five men rolling ten-pins on a recent Sunday. In going to the station he lost three but after having lodged the two remaning prisoners, he jumped on his horse and soon captured one of those who had escaped. Why wouldn't it be a good idea for this town to keep a horse ready saddled for police use at any time, particularly in the day time, when there is only one police officer. It would be found of great assistance on a great many occasions.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Shortly after eleven o'clock last evening fire was discovered in the barn situated on Foster street, belonging to Franklin Osborn and occupied by Franklin Osborn, Jr., & Co. The barn was used for the horses employed in the tan yard of the above named firm. There were four in the barn at the time of the fire, three of them were rescued with great difficulty and the other was burned. The barn also contained some three tons of hay, the harnesses, blankets and furnishings found about a stable. There was every evidence that a desperate attempt had been made to fire the place and the dastardly firebug knew the location well, and where his work would be the most effective. In the rear of the barn was a swinging door, through which the manure was thrown out. Beneath this window in the barn, was a quantity of straw and above was a hole through which the hay is dumped from the scaffold. Here is where the incendiary did his work, and fed by the draft from the door the fire spread with great rapidity, and the building was soon in flames. Adjoining the barn was a shed which was also burned. On the lot adjoining and in close proximity was a barn belonging to Miss Ann Ragan, to which the fire soon communicated and this was also destroyed. The buildings of Mr. George Clerk were on fire several times, but by the persistent efforts of our firemen they were saved. The barn was built by Mr. Osborn in 1859 and was occupied at that time for his private use. There was no insurance on the building or its contents. The loss is estimated at about $1000. The barn of Miss Ragan was not insured and her loss will probably be about $200. The mettle of our fire department was shown last night. They responded promptly to the alarm, and when the close proximity of other buildings to the fire is considered, their work speaks for itself. It is supposed the fire was discovered by a passing market man who gave the alarm.

The last day of the Faith Convention at Old Orchard, was addressed by Rev. Daniel Steele, D. D., formerly of Peabody, and was one of the most powerful of the entire session. His subject was "The Full Assurance of Faith," in the presentation of which he urged the necessity of the witness of the spirit to the complete evidence of conversion. One great cause of the decay of faith, he said, was the failure of the Christian pulpit to enforce the personality of the Holy Spirit. To overcome the effects of doubt, live on the right, as did Christian in Pilgrim's Progress—that is, live as though you had no doubt, act on the word of God, and to receive the full assurance of faith make an immediate, irreversible self-surrender to Jesus as your Lord and Master. The discourse was interspersed with copious extracts from the Scriptures bearing upon the theme considered.

Some of our young men will remember C. F. Tobey, who used to drive a milk wagon into this town a few years ago. The Brockton Gazette says of him: C. F. Tobey distinguished himself Sunday at Onset bay by rescuing a colored boy from the perilous fate of being carried out to sea in an open boat with no oars. The little fellow was apparently not over five years old, and at the time of his rescue was indulging in some very choice language respecting his ticklish situation, all of which was not lost on a bevy of young ladies who saw the whole performance from the wharf. Mr. Tobey was the lion of the day after the performance of the valorous feat.

The following are the uncalled for letters at the Post office Aug. 8, 1883: Charles F. Allen, Thomas Butler, Mrs. Margaret S. Clark, John Driscoll, Cornelius Driscoll, Catharine Evans, R. M. Jackman, Geo. F. Johnson, Mary Kelley, Mary Ann Leary, John McDonnell, Hannah Moloney, Mary E. Moody, H. M. Merrill, Joseph Peabody, H. L. Pfuhl, Mrs. Ellen Ross, Mrs. Kate S. Stewart, T. E. Sweetser, M. G. Welch, Samuel H. Weare, Mrs. Thomas Woodman, John H. Welch, Carl E. York, Mrs. Buxton, Louis Bereson.

Mr. George McCausland, of this town, met with an accident at Lynn last week. While attempting to get on a horse car at Lynn, he miscalculated the speed of the car and swung backward just in time to be struck by a car coming in an opposite direction. He fell to the ground unconscious and was removed to Dr. Bergengreen's drug store. We are glad to state that his injuries were not of a serious nature, there being only slight cuts on the back of his head, nose and upper lip. He took the next car for Peabody.

The annual camp meeting at Asbury Grove will begin August 17. The Rev. Dr. W. F. Mallalieu, presiding elder of Boston district, will have charge of the meetings. There are 250 families now on the ground.

So Peabody.—Mrs. Nellie Swallow of Dover, N. H., has been visiting friends here the past week.

The Draper house on High street has been undergoing repairs the past week.

A market man from Danvers met with quite a severe accident while returning from Boston one day last week. He laid down on his team to sleep, when his horse got frightened and ran away, throwing him to the ground; when near the house of Perley Galeucia, the wagon struck the hydrant there breaking the casing, and clearing himself from the wagon, started down the street with the shafts up over his back. Finely ne was secured by Mr. Isaac Twiss; the man was somewhat stunned by the fall and did not seem to know where he was for the time being.

Miss Jemmima Craig is stopping in Damariscotta, Me., for a few weeks, and is the guest of the Rev. C. V. Hanson.

Mr. Warren Galeucia has been making extensive improvements around his residence the past week.

Thomas Larrabee has removed into the tenement recently occupied by C. M. Merrow, on Court street.

Miss Florence L. Parker is spending a part of her vacation in Reading, Mass.

Mr. Joseph Wirth was buried from this place Aug. 2d, aged 66 yrs. 2 mos. 21 days.

Mr. Warren Larrabee met with what might have terminated in serious results, last Thursday, while berrying at Cedar pond swamp. He stepped on to what seemed to be solid footing, when he went down nearly to his hips, and had it not been for his basket he probably could not have got out very easily, for he stuck a pole down fifteen feet and could not find any solid bottom.

Lewis Brown and family made a short visit to Mt. Vernon, N. H., last Thursday, the guest of C. C. Carpenter.

Mr. S. K. Newhall was stricken on Sunday with paralysis, and is very low. His recovery his doubtful.

It is reported of a Peabody boy who regularly visits a young lady in this part of the town, that one night not long ago, after he had unhitched his horse preparatory to putting him in a neighboring stable, the horse fell into a ditch which had been left open, and it became necessary to fill it in before he could be extricated; whether the young man "stayed late" that night we know not.

Miss Alice Cornell, of Stoneham, who was visiting Mrs. Mills, received a severe cut on her arm by a hatchet one day last week. The wound bled profusely. A physician dressed the wound and was obliged to take several stitches in the young lady's arm.

An attempt was made about five o'clock this morning to burn the mill of Andrew Jacobs & Co. on Foster street. A quantity of paper was placed in one of the bins where the ground bark comes from the mill in close proximity to the partition, and set on fire; it was fortunately discovered by an employe before serious damage was done. A hole was burned through the partition, however, and had there been a little draft the large quantities of tan dust would have carried the fire over the building.

West Peabody.—Arthur Billings, a lad only thirteen years of age, who was employed by Mr. James E. Sheen, stole $26 in money and a watch from that gentleman, recently. Mr. Sheen went away, locking up the house, and Billings effected an entrance and stole the watch, which was left hanging on a nail, and the $26 from a vest pocket. He was arrested and the watch and $5.50 of the money was recovered. He was put on probation.

The picnic of the West Peabody Farmers' Club last Thursday at Newhall's grove was very successful, there being some 350 people in attendance. The sports of the day consisted of a double scull boat race on Sauntaug lake, between Lynnfield and Danvers parties, for a purse of $10, won by the former; also a tub race, which terminated in all the participants tipping overboard, whereby the prizes were declared off. The latter part of the afternoon and evening was pleasantly passed in dancing, to the music of Upton's quadrille band. The entertainment closed in the early evening, and all returned to their homes with the feeling that the day had been pleasantly and profitably spent.

A daughter of Benjamin F. Peach, Jr., of Lynn, eleven years of age, while attempting to cross from one boat to another at Humphrey's pond, last Thursday, fell into the water, and but for the timely assistance of Mr. Geo. F. Skinner, of Lynnfield, would have been drowned. She was taken to Mr. Skinner's residence, and dry clothes provided.

As a team belonging to Mr. Joseph S. Needham, containing six persons, was returning from the West Peabody Farmers' Club picnic last Thursday, was passing through Newbury street, the horse was uncontrollable owing to a broken bit and ran into a stone wall, throwing out the occupants and breaking a leg near the ankle of Mrs. P. A. Snyder, a daughter of Mr. Needham's. The other occupants were uninjured.

Fire Department Notes.—Chief Engineer, Geo. S. Willis, of Pittsfield, Mass., was in town last Wednesday, examining the S.C. Bancroft hand engine, with a view to buying it for a manufacturing company in that city.

Foreman, W. J. Roome of steamer 1, is spending his vacation at Marblehead neck.

Steamer No. 1 is ordered on duty for the next two months, and No. 2, will only answer on the second alarm.

The new uniforms of the Abel Proctor H. & L. company have arrived, and they are the handsomest rig in the department. The jacket is red with blue collars and cuffs, and blue front with crossed hook and ladder and number in white. Black belt, trimmed with white, with letters on a red ground. Blue caps with letters and numbers in nickle. The belts of the officers are white. The uniforms were made by Daly and Bryan of Boston.

The article in the "Salem News" in relation to the residence of the relief driver of this department, caused no little comment among the firemen, as that was the first time that they had ever heard anything against Mr. Morgan's living in Salem, and driving as relief, for three Sundays in a month. Mr. Morgan is an old Peabody fireman and is a prompt and efficient driver; that being what the engineers require without regard to residence.

Foreman Eugene Kelley, of Truck one of Danvers, saved the life of an old family horse, at the fire in Danvers last Tuesday morning. The Danvers boys are sorry they have got the new truck as they have to stay at work on the ruins of a fire now—when they have one—instead of waiting for the ruins to burn up, as they used to.

Hose company No. 1, tested the Lowery hydrant on the Square Monday evening, using three lines of hose. It was found to be in good order and worked satisfactorily.

Hose 1 and H. & L. 1, voted at their meetings, Monday evening, to attend the muster in Portsmouth, N. H.

Frank G. Clough, of steamer two, has bought out the provision business of Horace F. Buxton.

The fire of last night demonstrates very clearly the need of more horses in this department. The old black pair should be replaced with new ones, and another pair bought, in order that both steamers could go out together. The time lost in getting the second steamer to a fire is generally pretty valuable. As it was last night, everything was favorable and all came out right. The situation was one that called for some pretty sharp work, and that the "boys" put in that work is very evident by the looks of the ruins this morning. Steamer 1 was the first one out, quickly followed by the H. & L. and Hose 1.

Steamer 1 blew off the coupling of their suction hose last night, disabling them for a time, only.

About four thousand feet of hose was in use last night, and two lengths had the couplings blown off.

The piece of suction hose disabled, was new and had never been used before.

Hose five made good time in coming down to the fire but there was no need of their wetting their hose.

A hen coop belonging to Mr. Osborn caught fire from the burning barn last night and was partly destroyed. An effort was made to get the hens out, but two of them were found dead this morning. Besides the loss of the buildings, some large apple trees in Mr. Osborn's garden were badly scorched, and many limbs will probably have to be cut off. Mr. Osborn has always taken a great deal of pride in these trees, having set them out when a young man and watched their growth, and cared for them for half a century.

Hose five will probably attend the Portsmouth muster. Zero.

He got the wrong man: Last Saturday night a man, grossly intoxicated, stood on Lowell street near Sawyer, and insulted several ladies and gentlemen as they passed. This was kept up for some time, when along came one of our unobtrusive citizens who resides in the vicinity and the rough put out his foot to trip him up. The fellow had made a mistake, and, if he had been spoiling for a fight, he was accommodated, and came out second best, with his face badly bruised and a good lesson taught him.

The water cart which refreshes our streets holds six hundred gallons. The tank was made by Slade, of Boston, and the body by Dole & Osgood, of Peabody About four minutes are required to fill the tank, from the stands located in the different parts of the town, and it is replenished in the neighborhood of thirty times during a day. It sprinkles Main St., as far as Grove, Central to the hay scales, Lowell to the engine house and Foster as far as Franklin, and is drawn by a pair of the fire department horses.

About as mean an exhibition of close-fisted, grasping humanity as we want to witness, is to see one man attempting to crowd another into jail for debt when he has all his property closely held by attachment.—Woburn Advertiser.

Opinion of Dr. Mott, late Government Chemist, on Allcock's Porous Plaster.

My investigation of Allcock's Porous Plaster shows it to contain valuable and essential ingredients not found in any other plaster. These ingredients are so perfectly proportioned that the Allcock's Porous Plaster will not cause blisters or excessive irritation, and I find it superior to and more efficient than any other plaster. PRESENT POWER.

TO-MORROW A LONG WAY OFF WHEN HELP IS WANTED TO-DAY.

Comfort is never in a hurry. Pain and distress are in hot haste. It is to the "friend in need"—the friend who does something now—that the old adage pays the compliment of being "a friend indeed." That they do not keep the sufferer in suspense is the salient excellence of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. The plasters of other days—whether porous or otherwise—said—"Wait until to-morrow: We can promise nothing on the spur of the moment." But pain unrelieved, like hope deferred, maketh the heart sick. Benson's plasters act on application. They permeate, soothe, warm and heal, containing, as they do, chemical and medicinal agents of the highest efficiency. Their motto is NOW, and the genuine have the word CAPCINE cut in the middle of each plaster. Price 25 cents. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

TAMMANY AND BUTLER.—Much billing and cooing is going on just now between the Tammany Democracy and Governor Butler of Massachusetts. It's twenty years since Tammany Democrats gave the General rotten apples in exchange for hard words in front of the City Hall. Things have changed since then—changed notably within the past three years. The same Democrats—or their lineal descendants—worship the General from afar; are calling on him to come and give them a "Long Talk;" are rising up to applaud at the mention of his name, and cheering him to the echo. The first public sign of this wondrous change was a month or two ago, when Mr. Kelly announced—prematurely, as afterward appeared—that Governor Butler would deliver the "Long Talk" before the society on the Fourth of July. In making the announcement Mr. Kelley explained that the Governor though originally a member of Tammany, had for obvious reasons been absent from the meetings for many years, but that all differences had now disappeared and he was again in full communion. The explanation and announcement were received with wild demonstrations of delight.

The governor, not being able to accept the invitation to deliver the "Long Talk," wrote a cooing letter of regret as full of "taffy" as his Harvard speech, in which he said his "incessant public duties" deprived him of the opportunity to prepare an address worthy the society, its history or its members. "He who talks to Tammany," said the gentleman who caught Tammany's sour apple in the Park, "should weigh well his words, for he is before a Council of the Chiefs." The reading of the letter was greeted with tumultuous applause and at its close three times three cheers were given for Governor Butler. Ah, how times have changed! And then when the orator of the "Long Talk" wished to illustrate the powerlessness of the Press to injure popular idols in public esteem, no matter with what malice and malignity it pursues them, his more shining example, next, of course, to Mr. John Kelley, the "Boss" of the Hall and the occasion, was Governor Butler of Massachusetts. And again the Tammany Democrats rose on their hind legs and cheered him. All this billing and cooing evidently means something. And if it means anything it is simply that Tammany is looking for an organization that wants a candidate. The two have not exactly fallen in love with each other at first sight. They are too old and have been too long acquainted for that. But it is quite clear that each sees in the other something that can be used for their mutual advantage; hence these demonstrations of affection. From present appearances it is safe to say that the Tammany candidate for the Presidential nomination is Benjamin F. Butler, of Massachusetts. It is a happy combination, too.—N. Y. Tribune.

She bought a prayer book and became a very zealous Episcopalian. There was one Eastern custom, however, which got her into trouble. The members of the local church with which she was connected, like the Greek Christians in Russia, were accustomed on Easter morning to salute each other with the words "The Lord is risen," to which the suitable response was, "He is indeed," or "He is risen, indeed." This young lady on Easter morning was surprised to hear from a gentleman, instead of the customary, "Good morning," the salutation, "The Lord is risen." She made some inappropriate reply and passed on. Soon she was met by another Episcopal friend who gravely exclaimed, "The Lord is risen." "Yes," she replied, with a smile, "so Mr. Smith just told me."

"What have you got for dinner?" inquired a disgusted drummer of the waiter. The drummer had been in the town twenty-four hours without taking an order.

"Roast duck, sir."

"Ah! was the duck shot on the wing?"

"I guess so."

"Trying to get away from this cussed place, wasn't he?"

"I presume likely enough, sir."

"Good bird; sagacious fowl; rara avis. I admire his pluck and pity his misfortune. You may bring me that duck. I'll take the whole of him. I'll help him along on the road."—New Orleans Times.

A VOICE FROM THE NORTHWEST.—Milwaukee, Wis.—The Daily Sentinel, which is the leading morning paper of this state, writes: "St. Jacobs Oil, the wonderful remedy for rheumatism, has been used by a large number of people in this city, and with effect truly marvelous."

The telegraphers' strike
Is little short of treason;
My city cousins write
They're coming for the season.

I'd stop them if I could,
And that's what makes the harm,
I cannot telegraph to them,
"There's cholera on the farm."

MOTHER'S SPINNING WHEEL.

CONCERNING ONE ARTICLE THAT WAS NOT FOR SALE, AND ANOTHER WHICH IS CHEAP AT ANY PRICE.

"No, sir, I wouldn't sell you that for any money; that spinning-wheel was my mother's. It was one day, when she was singing like a lark and making this old wheel hum, that my father, then a young medical student, afterwards a farmer, fell in love with her—some fifty years ago."

So spoke the proprietor of a rough bit of farm land in Ulster County, N. Y., to a relic-hunter, and "mother's" spinning-wheel remained among her children and grandchildren.

"My mother," writes Rev. J. W. Phelps, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. Church, Chicago, has used PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and wishes me to say that she has found it more effective than anything she ever used for invigorating and strengthening the system debilitated by malaria. She desires me also especially to mention the certainty with which it aids digestion and overcomes exhaustion."

Ever since the first household was established "mother's" opinion has been more potent in this world than that of judge, jurist or physician. Her hand has always cooled the fever and her voice has been filled with hope. With each day's decline, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is becoming more deservedly popular with the women who guard alike husband and children. It eradicates malarial poison from the blood, from which there is now such wide-spread suffering.

Please observe: DR. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not an essence of ginger. It is a combination of several ingredients, of which none singly can produce anything like its effect. For Kidney, Stomach and Liver troubles, it is the standard and unfailing remedy. In two sizes; 50 cents and $1. The latter the cheaper. Hiscox & Co., Chemists, New York.

A country merchant visited the city a few days ago and purchased from a dollar store a table castor, which he took home with him, and after putting a tag on it marked $14, made a present of it to a Methodist preacher, whose church his family attended. The reverend gentleman took the package home, opened it, and examined the contents. The next day he took the castor (with the tag attached) back to the grocery man, and said to him: "I am too poor in this world's goods to afford to display so valuable a castor on my table, and if you have no objections I should like to return it and take $14 worth of groceries in its stead." The merchant could do nothing but acquiesce, but fancy his feelings.—Cincinnati Gazette.

BEECHER'S BAD HEAD. — For two months in the year Henry Ward Beecher can't preach. In August and September he takes his vacation and endures the onset of the hay fever. And it is, so he says, something terrible and tremendous. A man with hay fever isn't accountable for his actions. He is merely a wild beast—frantic with snuffling, sneezing and headache. His eyes are red and so is his nose. Every nerve in his skull thrills with distress and his head is a fountain of tears. He lives only to fly from seaside to mountain-top in search of relief. And yet, whether we call this form of Catarrh hay-fever, rose-fever, hay-cold or rose-cold, Ely's Cream Balm will cure it. This remedy is simple, pleasant and easy of application. Placed in the nostrils it penetrates and soothes the affected parts at once, restores the impaired senses and creates healthy secretions in cases of the longest standing. You cannot run away from hay fever, but you can drive it from you by using Ely's Cream Balm.

It was at the close of the wedding breakfast. One of the guests arose, and, glass in hand, said, "I drink to the health of the bridegroom. May he see many days like this." The intention was good, but the bride looked as if something had displeased her.

A GENERAL STAMPEDE.

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at Spaulding's for a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at the above Drug Store.

A man named Gasbill recently applied to the Arkansas Legislature to change his name because his girl always objected to his figure whenever he'd metre. She said he was to high, and turned him off.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

The cry is "the trade dollar must go." Yes, it will go into the clutches of the brokers, and when they have gobbled up the last one they will flood the country with them again as they did two or three years ago.

Damonia, the new remedy advertised in our columns, is a magnetic mineral earth lately discovered in Texas, which is careful analysis of our most prominent chemists declares to contain the most potent medical ingredients. A trial is recommended.

A warning voice is raised against dosing too freely with acid phosphates, which make a delightful hot weather drink. Too much of the drink is said to affect the teeth and bones unfavorably.

The Summer Resort Dog.

"Dost keep a dog?" asked a dusty tourist, as he walked up to the counter of a summer resort hotel and prepared to enter his name, and looked at the cool clerk.

"We dost," said the clerk, as he used his handkerchief to flirt with a girl with a cheese cloth dress on, who sat on the veranda in such a manner that the bug worked on the instep of her stocking would show.

"That settles it," said the tourist, and he was gone. A newspaper man who was near, and who was looking for an item, stopped the tourist and asked him to take a drink, and as they leaned over the bar the pump was put to work, and the tourist said:

"This is my second year summer resorting, and if I live till September it will be a streak of luck. I have only slept two hours a night for two weeks, and I have been to nine different places. Do you know, I think hotel men are mighty big fools. They spend thousands of dollars advertising, to get people to come to their hotels, and often in one day they undo all the good they have done by advertising, and put out upon the road dozens of walking advertisements, who will tell what a big liar the advertiser is. I went to a house last week which is situated on the bank of a lake, a most beautiful sheet of water, and every thing looked lovely. I retired at ten o'clock, for a good country sleep. The bed was hard, the bed clothes smelled frowy, and the carpet was dirty, but I turned in. Just as I got sleepy the landlord sat down on the veranda near my room, with half a dozen guests that were full of beer, and they talked and told stories until after midnight, until I was wild. The guests went to bed, and the landlord, who had to remain awake, and wanted company, corraled a couple of dudes who had just returned from a dance at another hotel, and they talked, till two o'clock. I got my grip-sack packed, and was going to leave, when they all went to bed, and all was quiet. Then I was going to sleep, when a dog that had been lying on the steps waiting for his turn to come, began to bark. Well, what on earth that dog found to bark at, I couldn't tell. I got up and looked out, and everything was quiet, and there was nothing to cause a dog to bark. The dog saw me, as I opened the blind, in my night robe, and he wagged his tail as though he had done as he would be done by, and he actually seemed to think he had done me a favor. I called him in my room and gave him the remains of a lunch of cold chicken which I had in my lunch basket, and he seemed to think he had struck a soft thing. I thought that a dog always laid down to sleep after a hearty meal, and I let him out, and went to bed. Do you know that dog began barking right where he left off, and kept it up for two hours? I would open the window and throw a chair at the dog, and he would act tickled, and look for another chair. He seemed to think I was playing with him, and he kept barking. After I had thrown all the chairs, the dog looked sad, and then he went down the steps to the gravel walk and began to howl. O, how he did howl! I am a little superstitious about a dog howling, and I wasn't in a very good frame of mind, but the dog finally let his howl die out, and I was just getting into a drowse, when an expressman came along and tumbled a two hundred pound trunk on the veranda. Well, it sounded like a cannon, and I got up and looked at my watch and it was four o'clock in the morning, and I had not slept a wink. By that time a milk wagon came along, ringing a bell, and the porter came and pounded on the doors of three other guests who wanted to get up for an early train, and a 'bus came around and the driver yelled 'all-aboard,' and I got up and took a walk before breakfast."

"Well, you did have a hard time. But the breakfast made up for it all, didn't it?" asked the newspaper man.

"Made up for nothing. Now, you may think I am a kicker, but I am not. I can get along with good coffee and bread and butter for breakfast, and be happy. But, O, what coffee that was. It was terrible. And the butter! Say, there was a creamery within two miles of that hotel, where they make as fine butter as a man ever saw, and every farmer within twenty miles sells splendid butter, and yet the butter on the table of that summer hotel, which I had seen advertised as the finest in the west, was not fit to grease a wagon. The landlord must have hunted all over the country to find butter as poor as that. Why, that butter would advertise his hotel as a fraud louder than all the gilt edged advertising he could do in a whole season in favor for his place. No person would ever go there again, so I say such a landlord has not got sense."

"What do you think is the reason landlords do not make efforts to retain customers, after they once get them?" asked the newspaper man.

"O, many of them do, but some seem to think if they slap a guest on the shoulder, and say, 'How are you Jim,' it is enough, and the guest will feel at home. But I tell you a man don't feel at home unless he can sleep and have something good to eat. Some of them make a great mistake in catering more to a few dudes and dudesses who come from the cities to attend a Saturday night dance, than they do to guests that would stay all the season. They will allow these temporary visitors to run the house all night, and gallop up and down the verandas, and sing, until people who are trying to sleep get so disgusted they will leave on Monday. But the dog nuisance is the worst, and a landlord who will keep dogs about a summer resort, to bark all night, makes a mistake. Say, why wouldn't it be a good idea for guests to carry a little strychnine for dogs. By George, I never thought of that. Is there a drugstore near here?" And the tourist started for a drugstore.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—I read the letter headed 'In Camp' which appeared in your last issue with much pleasure, for it brought back recollections of my own life in the woods, after having almost forgotten my youthful exploits in the camping line.

Some how or other I could rarely go to camp without some misfortune befalling me. Usually I had good luck, so far as sport was concerned, but some ludicrous mishap would invariably dampen all the poetry of camp life. When I was younger I went into the woods each year and sometimes remained a month in the wilderness; but of late years, age compels me to stay at home. I had just finished my freshman year at Harvard when I was first stricken with camping fever. Go I must and go I did. I intended to be gone a month; and I came home inside of four days, my face covered with white flakes of cuticle, and with a most potent dread of isolation, to boot.

I well remember one summer's trip to the woods: I went into camp two days before my companions who were to join me. I had one fair day in which to clean out the camp and do a little fishing, and then it began to rain.

I rather enjoyed the idea of a shower at first, but as my bump of continuity was not large the patter, patter soon grew monotonous. The sky became dull and leaden with the wind from the east, and a genuine storm set in. A drop of water upon my head relieved the monotony and set me to wonder if the cabin would leak. Another and still another drop and then a succession of drops, and I moved myself only to realize that there were manifestations of moisture everywhere. As the roof became wet so did the floor and my blankets. Seeking shelter beneath the table I underwent another and distinct edition of wetting, as that in turn became soaked. Moisture permeated everything. A string of trout hanging from a nail by the door was imbrued to a new life. A fish gave a weak flap, and before long the whole lot seemed one succession of flaps.

I recollect that I compared this new life with that twitching of the human body after death, when connected with a powerful battery. I wasn't invigorated at all. The cold water trickled down my back, and my wet clothes clung to my shivering body as if I had been immersed in some powerful paste. As the water found its way into my gum boots, and gradually filled them, my spirits declined proportionally and I bewailed my lot. At last an idea entered my head. I threw my coat upon the deal table, and covered it with about a wheelbarrow load of dirt which I scraped up with the frying-pan, and under this impromptu, but effective shelter, I drew my cold, cramped body. How it did pour! The inside of the roof was fairly afloat with water, and as the shanty was banked on the outside I soon found myself seated in a coffee-colored puddle, with the prospect of being washed out. In every conceivable place where water could cling, it did cling until it could get good headway and then it would dash to the floor and start anew.

My sugar became syrup and my meal settled into hasty pudding. I was disgusted and in despair. To fall into an ice-covered river is nothing beside having a raw north easter concentrated over ones unprotected head for twenty-four hours. I suffered perfect misery. At last the rain ceased and when the sun lightened the clouds, I started for home. In the depot I met my friends on their way to join me, and after getting a new lot of provisions, we returned to camp and remained nearly three weeks.

"What makes you look so blue?" said Pat to Mike. "Begorra, an' you'd look blue, too, if you came home and found your wife in bed with spinal meningitis." "Be hevins! I'd uv shot the bloody Italian!"

A particularly smart Philadelphia clerk has put out the sign, "Trade dollars of 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882 and 1883 taken at $1.17." No such pieces were issued in the years named, and the silly joke only seems to confuse ignorant men and women.

Summer Clothes.

Some writer in an exchange who has been studying up the subject, and looks at it from a scientific standpoint, says the popular idea that light clothes are cooler for summer wear than dark is altogether wrong, and that dark clothes are very much cooler that light. This is a stab at the time honored linen suit, and should be frowned down at once. The linen costume has been handed down through generations in all its original beauty, and retains its hollow, flabby appearance, and wrinkles, and general frigid style, that time, or flat irons, or flannel underclothes cannot erase. A suit of linen clothes on a man makes him look like the sign of a "Yankee" in front of a "notion" store, or like an icicle dressed in pants, and no one ever saw a more thoroughly dejected appearing man, and one who looks to much as though he had lost his last friend, and was afraid to look anyone squarely in the face, as does the man who comes out for the first time in the summer with his last season's suit of linen clothes. He seems to feel that the whole world and a large portion of New York state are staring at him with field glasses, and it makes him so nervous he trembles. He generally puts on the clothes in the heat of the day, right after dinner, and he is half way down town before he begins to realize the predicament he is in, and then he grits his teeth firmly together, and determines to wade through, and pay no attention to the gaping throng. Each and every separate and distinct wrinkle that was left in the pants from the day he wore the clothes the season before, or has accumulated during the winter, stand out prominently; the green landscape sketch that he found on the seat of the pants last season, and which refused to come out when persuaded by soap and rubbing, looms up now on the back breadth, and the coat, which seems to have shrunk up in the back at least a foot, refuses to come down and hide the green placque on the hurricane deck of the pants. One leg of the pants he finds has shrunk about six inches and is gradually climbing towards his knee, while the heat of the sun, the dampness of the rain, or the wash-tub seems to have no effect upon the other leg except to twist it around to the front, and both legs bag at the knees and bind at the ankles and bulge out in spots whenever the air fills them, until the legs of the unfortunate wearer look like a string of these sectional sausages. Then there is the linen duster. No man ever bought a linen duster who could explain to even his own satisfaction, the next day after he bought it, what on earth he wanted of it anyway. There are more scarecrows and tramps throughout this country to-day that are wearing linen dusters and a look of woe, than half the people think for. It is seldom that a man is found in a public place twice in one season with a linen suit of clothes on. One day's wear seems to be enough for the average man. The white summer hat, the white vest, the low shoe and clocked stockings may be all right for light summer wear, and white pants hold their own pretty well, but linen clothes and the linen duster are a hollow mockery, and some one will yet fall upon the manufacturers of linen suits and wreak a terrible vengeance for all this suffering. A good pair of close fitting double-barrel gun bags beat a pair of linen pants all out for style, and don't attract so much attention.—Peck's Sun.

He was a meek and a humble-looking man, wearing a stand-up collar and a white tie, and seeming to be always on the point of giving out his text. After clearing his throat and hesitating a while, he suddenly asked:

"If I had a margin up on Wabash, and if Wabash should go down, down, down, do you think that faith and prayers would have any effect?"

"My dear sir," replied the man in the white hat, as he came to a standstill in his walk, "if you had a margin up on Wabash at, say 50 cents, and it went down to 40, all the faith and prayers you could dump into a hundred-acre lot wouldn't save you from putting up more, or being closed out."

Don't you believe in the virtue of prayer, sir?"

"Not in a business way on Wabash—no, sir. If you are thinking of buying stock, sir, be ready with your margins, look out for roorbacks, watch the tickers, and hire some cheap man to do all the praying away back in some cheap town. Don't give him over 75 cents per day, and make up your mind at the start that it's money thrown away."—Wall Street News.

It is the New York Sun that can say; "The shell shaped straw hat meets with only a limited amount of popularity." "Limited amount of popularity" shows to what an abuse the word "amount" must submit. Amount does not express "degree," and in the Sun's sentence it is ridiculous surplusage. "A limited popularity" is correct, while "amount of popularity" is an error for which a school-boy ought to be punished.—Provincetown Exchange.

Miscellaneous.

TOO MANY SALOONS.—"The fact is," said a prominent member of the Church Temperance Society, of New York City, "all classes drink too much. From the gilded saloons up-town and down-town, where costly works of art hang on the walls, adorn the parlors and make attractive the scene, to the lowest dive in Cherry street or the meanest hole in Chatham street, the lesson may be drawn. Who, for instance, could exaggerate the scenes born of intemperate use of alleged 'wine' in the wine rooms of our great masquerade balls? There is not a gin mill in the city where drunken men are not manufactured daily. Murder, lust, disorder of all kinds, find their inspiration at the public bar, and it is intemperate use of liquor at public bars which the society hopes to stop. One particularly good feature is the society's interest in the boys of to-day—the men of to-morrow."

"But boys don't drink?"

"Don't they, though? Go down town and see the boys from fourteen to nineteen, clerks in offices and stores, at lunch. They not only drink, but they guzzle. Follow them to the theatre at night; see where they go between the acts. Poisoning the air with what in their gullibility they call 'tobacco' and stenching the neighborhood with their nasty cigarettes, they rush in droves to the nearest gin mill, drink their brandy, whisky or gin and seltzer, and take another 'stink weed' for their nerves. Perhaps they don't consider themselves boys, but in the eye of the law and common sense they are boys 'all the same,' and very silly boys at that. To meet the case of these boys in coachmen's coats and toothpick shoes will be an earnest effort in the work of the society, and, further than this, it will take cognizance of the smaller boys who also drink."

"What! Smaller boys drink! Nonsense!"

"Let us see how much 'nonsense' there is in the assertion. In the first report put out by the Citizens' Law and Order League of Massachusetts, it was stated that nearly all dealers in intoxicating liquors in the City of Boston sell to minors to drink on the premises, and also to very little children to carry home. In one saloon visited by officers of the society, twenty boys under fifteen were found drinking, and in another thirty boys between sixteen and eighteen. Of thirty-six cases of infringement of law prosecuted within a few weeks, twenty-one were for selling drink to minors. What future can be expected of these boys, and what must be the effect upon the little children who habitually meet the sights and sounds of the liquor saloons when they go to fetch liquor for their parents? It has been stated that ninety-five per cent. of the vicious youths of our country come from homes where there has been excessive drinking, and there is no reason to doubt the truth of this estimate."

If one wishes to see railroading in its most primitive style he should go to the island of Nantucket. Here is a little narrow-gauge road, connecting the town proper with the settlement at Surf Side. It is related that when the road started, a few years ago, it was customary to flag approaching trains whenever a team appeared in sight of the track. It is also said that it was impossible to run on schedule time, from the fact that the engineer was frequently obliged to alight and drive stray hens from the rails. But we will not vouch for the truth of this statement.—Manufacturers' Gazette.

E. B. Phillips, who nearly a year ago resigned the presidency of the Eastern Railroad to take the presidency of the Toledo, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad to build up its waning fortunes, has sent in his resignation, as the load was more than he could carry. By late quotations the stock has declined to 2 1-2, with too many sellers for the buyers. There is said to be over $200,000 par value of this stock held in Lynn.

The following episode took place at a White Mountain hotel last week: Mrs. A. who is of a jealous turn, to Miss B., who is no longer in the heyday of youth: "Why, Miss B., was it you I saw talking so confidentially with my husband on the piazza this morning? I thought it was some young lady and began to be quite jealous, but I feel quite relieved to find it was only you."

"See here, landlord, didn't you advertise an entire absence of flies and mosquitoes at this place?" "Certainly, sir; but those advertisements were prepared in March, and I assure you in the most solemn manner that we were not troubled in the least until the last of May. If you had only come up here in April you would have had a glorious time.—Detroit Free Press.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

LAST WEEK we alluded to the difference in wages between the telegraph operators and laborers in the various trades of the country. The sympathy of most of the merchants and of the press has been with the strikers in the contest, chiefly because the Western Union Co. has desired to keep the men on comparatively low wages, but has not cheapened its service to the public. The events of these two weeks, however, have shown that both sides need to make concessions. The telegraph company is doing better than the strikers would have the public believe, and the business men are finding out how easily they can dispense with the telegraph. Yet they are crippled and what few operators are at their post are evidently overworked. At the same time the company receives some accesssions and will receive more as time passes. Some of these men have families to support and we doubt if the labor organizations are in sufficient funds to support the strikers for an indefinite period.

The demand which is made by the operators is probably more than the company can pay. They would undoubtedly be willing to accept less, and the Western Union would doubtless be willing to pay more than they had previously done, if the old condition of things could be restored. There is probably no corporation or company, call them monopolists or what you will, who could submit to an increase of 33 per cent. on the wages of their employes. It is a fact that the purchasing power of labor is greater than a year ago; the price of corn, flour, and the necessaries of life, with few exceptions, is lower than it was a few years ago, with a still lower tendency. The same may be said of articles of wearing apparel, and nearly everything which the money of the laborer is required to purchase. Our manufacturers have not, as a rule, been making money. The closing of many of the mills on this account, the reduction of hours in some of the factories, throwing many laborers out of employment—all these things show that everything is tending toward a lower market, except the price of labor. Not only is labor as firm in its demands for wages equal to what was received before this downward tendency in the markets which we have mentioned, but it is even clamoring for more.

The recent failures in the leather and shoe trade will throw a large number of laborers out of employment. There are many things therewith connected, which have no reference to the labor question. But the tendency towards lower margins of profit, in many cases no profit at all, has not been without its effect. All things considered, the tendency of the markets, the increased purchasing power of money, lead to the opinion that concession must be made by the striking telegraph operators before harmony can be restored. If matters remain as they have, both sides will be very willing, it is likely, to concede something, for which the general public will be glad.

ONE OF the most disastrous results of the late failures in the leather trade is a lack of confidence on the part of money lenders and banking institutions, which ought to have come sooner. Before the failures a man with doubtful credit and not the best reputation for honorable dealing, could hire money with little difficulty. Now the honest man who always pays one hundred cents on a dollar, and whose reputation for straightforward business dealing has been unexceptional, will find it difficult to bridge over his immediate wants. This is one of the serious evils. The banks are spasmodic in their dealings with customers, in many cases. As long as everything goes smoothly, and they meet with no losses, the business public, which must have some credit in order to get along, is well accommodated. But let a crash of this kind come, and those who are in the best of financial standing are in many cases refused. This is but natural, and is one of the unfortunate secondary results of such failures.

There is another phase. There are business men, losers perhaps by the failures, who could with some difficulty and personal sacrifice meet their obligations, but who will avail themselves of the opportunity afforded by these suspensions to compromise with their creditors. Such was the case at the time of the great Boston fire. Such, to a limited extent, will be the case now. And the effect of such failures has a more disastrous effect, morally, than the larger ones which have preceded.

These events have also shown the need of a uniform Bankrupt law in the United States. Here again is the necessity of a few failures like that of Shaw Bros., to rouse the public and our business men, especially, to the urgency of such a law. The property of the firm is in New York, New Hampshire, Maine, Massachusetts and the Provinces. Our own state has probably the most just and equitable state bankrupt law of any that have been mentioned. But there is no uniformity in the different states, and it is more than probable that complications will arise, in the settlement, of great difficulty, and occasion much loss financially to the creditors. It is to be hoped that Congress when it meets again may be induced to give early attention to this matter. The failure should enforce the danger of manufactured notes, and "swapping paper" which has been too prevalent among business firms. It is surprising to notice the small amount of legalized indebtedness for merchandise which has been shown. There is no solid basis of finance to such proceedings. Failures in leather, also, are as bad as cotton failures or margins in railroad stocks, and in many cases equally as disastrous. There is no doubt that we shall have a clearer atmosphere, temporarily, at least.

VERY SOON after Gov. Butler was elected, it will be remembered that he alluded very sarcastically to Ex-Gov. Long's addresses on public occasions, stating in a very emphatic manner that his time would not be devoted to such occasions. How is it? In the State and out of it he has made as many of these addresses as any Governor.—More than this, the public business has been compelled to wait for his private business. It is not of great moment, but has Butler fulfilled his promise?

Has he accomplished anything in the matter of reform? Has anything been done by him that is not intended directly to influence his re-election? He has shown up abuses at Tewksbury which do not now exist, which have already been reformed, and under Republican administration. He has removed, indirectly, the Marshes. He has incurred an expense to the State in the investigation, nearly all of which could have been avoided. The removals at the Institution could have been effected by a few hours' converse in a proper spirit with the Board of Charities. The reform, if it may be so called, would have been accomplished, and expense saved the State.

He has prevented the re-nomination of Mr. Donelly, one of the ablest men on the Board of State Charities, representing the Catholics of the State, and has put in his stead a broken-down politician of doubtful ability, his only qualification, as far as we can understand, being that he is a staunch Butler man. It was much to the discredit of the Council that he was confirmed. If Mr. Donelly must be removed, a Catholic should have been put in his place, and this should have been insisted upon. Our state recognizes the poor of every nation, who have found here a home.—This is well. And on the Board should be found a representative of our adopted citizens of this faith, so large a number of whom are among us. Will the Catholic population rally to the support of a man who has so misrepresented them?

This is not all. He has insulted Miss O'Connell by the greatest insult to a woman—an attack upon her character. This, to a pure woman, is a stain which is often powerless in her to remove. Is this what is expected of the Chief Magistrate of Massachusetts? Imagine, for a moment, Gov. Butler's predecessor descending to such inuendoes. Is this what our law abiding citizens, democrats as well as republicans, would have our Governor engaged in?

Lucius Tuttle, general ticket agent of the Eastern railroad, who sends thousands of passengers to Mount Desert, White Mountains, Montreal, etc., says: "This year the boarding houses are doing the business; the hotels are behind. I attribute it to a bad year in Wall street or State street. The brokers are the best money spenders in the land. Their fullness or emptiness is the key to the prosperity of the best hotels."—Newburyport Herald.

In this vicinity it has been noted that the higher priced resorts have lacked the patronage dispensed last year. The tendency has been to get the most enjoyment out of the least money. This accounts for the popularity of the Willows—and it certainly is so. When seven hundred passengers can be transferred from the Lynn R. R. in one day—when on the same day four thousand people are congregated there, it is certainly the poor man's resort. The same may be said of Lynn Beach, a journey to which and return costs but twenty cents from this town. No wonder that such places find a harvest of patronage while the Point of Pines, with its costly hotels and expensive dinners, is thinly patronized, although the cost of transportation thither is but a trifle more. The same applies to the seashore and mountain hotels. There are few people who can afford the luxury of a hotel at five dollars a day for himself and family—at least for any length of time, especially when about the same amount per week will obtain comfortable quarters and more rest at a boarding house in the mountains.

We also imagine that Raymond's Excursions have contributed to this desire for lower prices. Raymond's tour expenses will average about five dollars per day, but in this are included the expenses by rail or boat, which brings the actual cost of living down to a reasonable figure. Many people are traveling this way, and when it is considered that the best hotels are visited, it is not to be wondered at.

THE ISSUING of the call for the Republican State Convention is usually the signal for some political activity in this State, and under the circumstances, it would excite great surprise if such was not the case. The apparent inactivity of the democratic party has led some journals to presume that Gen. Butler will hold to his expressed determination in his maugural, not to be a candidate this fall. We suspect this suggestion and the further suggestion of the name of Charles P. Thompson, is a trick of the enemy. The democrats are aware that with no other man than Butler can they hope for victory. They are also aware that they cannot nominate him until he gives the word. He has them entirely in his power, and we might add at his mercy.

It is unwise for the Republican party to be misled by such thoughts as the retirement of Butler from the contest. It will put in nomination its strongest man as developed by the sense of the convention yet to be chosen. Mention has of course been made of several names, any one of whom, we believe could carry the full vote of the party of this State, and defeat Butler. But it is not a question of personal preference this year, but of the future good of the party in this state and in the country. Whether it be Lieut. Gov. Ames, Ex-Gov. Talbot, Senator Robinson, or any other of the men who have been thought of, is of not so much matter as that the party should be united and harmonious. This we are glad to learn, seems to be the object sought to be attained by the leaders and the press through the State. It is worth working for, and we feel confident that it will compensate in the end, for all the labors which may be put forth in the campaign which must of necessity be short, sharp and decisive.

The Committee of the Essex Agricultural Society—J. L. Shorey, Dr. William Cogswell, and B. P. Ware—to examine applicants for the premium of $100, for the best prepared student, resident of Essex County, for admission to the College, will meet for that purpose at Plummer Hall, Salem, on Thursday, August 9th, from 9 1-2 to 12 o'clock a. m. Examination in geography, arithmetic, algebra, through simple equations and history of the United States. The next term commences September 13th.

William Reith, of Salem, father of William Reith, Jr., a well-known milliner of Salem, dropped dead, while carrying water to his son's cottage, at Asbury Grove, Hamilton, soon after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He was about 70 years of age, and a native of Peabody, where he carried on business as a stonemason for many years. He went to California during the gold excitement in 1849, and remained there for several years. Of late years he had resided with his son in Salem.

The effect of the telegraphers strike was clearly shown by the following account of the fire taken from the Boston Advertiser this morning: A barn in the rear of Frank Osborne's tannery, on Foster street, was burned last night, with one horse and 25 tons of hay. Loss, $2000; insured. A barn belonging to George Clerk, adjoining, was also burned. Loss, $1000; probably insured. Clerk's large morocco factory was saved with great difficulty.

Telegraph poles are exactly ten rods apart, and thirty-two of these poles consequently make a mile. In order to find out how fast a railway train is going, all that is necessary is to record the time, and when you have counted thirty-two telegraph poles, you will have gone a mile, and your watch will tell you the time taken to cover the distance.

It is estimated that the shifter daily shifts about one hundred cars from the heavy trains in the Peabody freight yards. The same engine makes three trips to Peabody in the course of twenty-four hours, and in the course of a month draws in the neighborhood of one hundred and fifty cars from Salem to Peabody.

One year ago yesterday the money order business was established at the post-office. There have been issued 930 orders and paid 247, the whole amounting to a little under $15,000. As the foreign order business has been lately put in operation here, the most of the business has been the issuing and paying of domestic orders. These figures indicate strongly that there was a need of the business.

A Somerville police sergeant captured five men rolling ten-pins on a recent Sunday. In going to the station he lost three but after having lodged the two remaning prisoners, he jumped on his horse and soon captured one of those who had escaped. Why wouldn't it be a good idea for this town to keep a horse ready saddled for police use at any time, particularly in the day time, when there is only one police officer. It would be found of great assistance on a great many occasions.

"IT'S A GOOD THING

AND I KNOW IT," WERE THE WORDS OF MR. LEVI PORTER, THE CELEBRATED FASHIONABLE CUTTER TO THE FIRM OF NATHAN & TAYLOR, UNDER THE NARRAGANSETT HOUSE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.—SHOWS WHAT AN HONEST THING WILL DO.

"It's a good thing; I know it's a good thing." Such were the words addressed to your reporter when he called at the fashionable establishment of Nathan & Taylor, under the Narragansett House, Providence, R. I. The speaker was Mr. Leroy Porter, head manager of the tailoring department of this large clothing house, as he was cutting his way through a mammoth pile of brocades, Scotch plaids and broadcloths.

"I felt sometimes as if there was a cannon ball resting on my stomach. I would have to get up at night for I was so short of breath. You see in the Spring—our busy season—we are at work sixteen hours per day. Have short times for meals, and at irregular hours. My stomach became very much disordered, and I was all out of health, I tried every kind of medicines. The doctors said it was a touch of dyspepsia. I could get nothing to do me permanent good until a friend recommended Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. I know it's a good medicine. It has completely cured me of stomach disorders and indigestion. It seems to be a thorough cleanser of the system from biliousness or anything of that kind. I know this for I've tried it. I'm in the best of health now, but should I ever have a dyspeptic turn again Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY would be my source of relief. Dr Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY acts upon the digestive organs in a charming manner, regulating their action, strengthening and purifying the whole system."

Book Notices.

The frontispiece of the Magazine of AMERICAN HISTORY for August, is a fine portrait, never before engraved, of the hero of battle and romance, Col. Alexander Scammell, who fell at the siege of Yorktown in 1781. The leading article is "Clayborne the Rebel;" it reads like a veritable romance. The illustrations, seventeen in number, which brighten its pages, form a curious history in themselves. The second paper in this admirable number of the magazine is the conclusion of Captain Potter's able series of essays, "Texas admitted to the Union." The shorter articles of the number are "An Old School Book" (the English Reader), by Joel Benton; and Rev. B. F. DeCosta's "Reply to Mr. Bancroft" on the subject of the Early Voyages. The Departments—Notes and Queries, Replies, Societies, and Book Notices, are filled with varied and readable matter. The new management are to be heartily congratulated on its pronounced success. Publication office, 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

OUR LITTLE ONES for July is a beautiful midsummer number, and the young readers will find it a rich treat. Among other good things, there is an illustrated sketch by Kate Tannatt Woods, entitled "What the Children Sent to China."

The Manhattan for August seems to have out-done itself in quality and quantity of interesting matter with the current issue, and the reader can but be pleased. The paper on "Florence the Beautiful," is worthy of careful perusal and will doubtless receive it, especially by students in painting and sculpture. while at the same time the other articles have merits which will ensure appreciation from even a superficial observer.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—We incline to the opinion that the subject of a free and perfect drainage should be duly considered in the laying out of streets and public thoroughfares within the jurisdiction of any progressive community. In view of the contemplated improvements on Aborn street, we would call the attention of the Board of Health, and all others interested, to the sanitary condition of the so-called Strong Water Brook. This brook now takes the whole drainage of Sutton, Aborn, Holten and Pierpont streets, also a large portion of Washington and Main streets, while possibly portions of the drainage from Boston street, Salem, utilize this route to the tide-waters of the sea. Of late years the mania for real-estate speculation has so altered the course of the above named brook that the line now presents too many elbows and angles for a perfect drainage for all waste matter that flows therein. These elbows and angles are the natural reservoirs for much decaying matter which, during the warm season when the springs are dry, cracks, bubbles and blisters in the hot sun, emitting an odor neither healthy nor agreeable.—That part of the town bordering on Aborn and Sutton streets is both picturesque and pleasing, and the laying out of Aborn street into a broad and commodious thoroughfare encourages the erection of tenement houses in this part of the town, and this brook must in time become a public sewer for the drainage of the New City now rapidly springing up on its borders; and the health and welfare of the village will demand the deepening and straightening of the channel of the brook and the removal of all obstructions which now prevent a free flow of all waste matter. It is said that a stitch in time saves nine, and the appropriation for the benefit of Aborn street should be amply sufficient to warrant a perfect drainage for the same, that the party in power may not have just cause to "go it blind."

Yours respectfully,
MOSES THE PROPHET.

The Massachusetts republicans need a clean representative candidate and a thoroughgoing appeal to the people. We trust the party will keep this end in view, and will not go running off after any short-sighted schemes of "practical politics"—any low combinations and expedients. It will probably be urged as a qualification for the candidate that he must be able to "carry Boston," that he must be under bonds to the liquor interests, or there must be a barrel on the ticket. We trust the party will not fall in with this programme, but will put its dependence on a canvass to spread out the record in every school district and to get out every voter. The liquor issue is not up. The election for four terms of Govs. Long and Talbot, avowed prohibitionists, did not put it in peril, and it is not a subject at this time of popular agitation in state affairs. The issue will be Butlerism, and it should be so managed by the opposition that the humbug and the demagogery should be all on one side. —Springfield Republican.

It may not be generally known that the Lowell Vox Populi was started by Gov. Butler. Lieut. Ricker, of this city, was employed in the office for several years.—Newburyport Germ.

At Night on the Brooklyn Bridge.

Evening is ushered in on the bridge by a rushing multitude of those who come to New York to work and go to Brooklyn to sleep. At first come the emptyings of the down-town offices, the insurance companies, banks, stock-broking houses, and wholesale stores. The employers and their clerks are in the throng pushing side by side. After them come the shop hands, mechanics, clerks in retail stores, and the laborers. Women and girls appear to be in the majority. The crowd lasts from 5 o'clock until after 7 o'clock. It contains no sightseers, nothing but tired and hungry people thinned down now to the number who find it to their advantage to use the new causeway. Before the evening rush is spent it is met by a broad column of people who are returning from Brooklyn to spend the evening in New York. You see the difference between the throngs at a glance. The stream that is setting toward New York is all made up of pleasure seekers, none except those going to the theatres being at all inclined to hurry. Young women who, two hours before, were hurrying the other way are now clinging to the arms of young men who were also early in the 5 o'clock rush to Brooklyn. They wore their working clothes then, but now they are faultlessly dressed. Policemen who, even now that they are uniformed, do not appear like genuine policemen, are met in threes and fours, lounging about and blocking the way. On the wagon roads the last trucks are thundering along, and the number of private carriages is increasing on both sides.

Suddenly there is a new element in the throng. Troops of bareheaded girls and young women are coming in bands from New York. They are poorly dressed, and many of them look stunted. Their hair is nine times in ten jet black, and is worn in front in a thick, square-cut bang that reaches almost to their eyes. Here and there are seen plumper and taller girls, with blonde bangs, blue eyes, and heavy cheek bones. The black-haired girls are nearly all Irish; the light-haired ones German. When you get beyond the New York tower you can see the tenements they have come from in Dover street, Frankfort street, Water street, Cherry street, Hague street and Franklin square. They link arms and swing along five abreast singing the merry ballads of the streets. The younger ones race, shout, play tag and snap the whip. The young men follow them on the bridge. They are factory hands, porters, truck drivers, pressmen, machinists and hard workers generally. Half their number have simply washed away all traces of the shops and kept their flannel shirts on. The others are dressed in their best, and look stiff and uncomfortable. One hears the girls say to one another, "There's Mickey and Johnny." Mickey and Johnny bring up with a short turn, and say, ceremoniously, "Good evening, ladies." After that the group resolves itself into couples.

The stars come out and masses of black shadows hide whole city wards. Nine strokes of one bell after another sound over the water, and the little bells on shipboard send up a musical peal that zigzags across and up and down the river. A great many solitary young women with painted faces and flashy clothes, each one humming and yet not appearing to hum any tune in particular, sweep slowly and ostentatiously to and fro. Evidently the bridge is going to be a favorite lounging, promenading and sightseeing resort.

Gradually the boisterous children that have been lunging at break-neck speed against the stomachs of stargazers and into the couples of dreamy lovers, disappear and leave the banjo and concertina players, the gaudy women, the contemplative smokers, and the bareheaded girls and their male companions to the enjoyment of the beautiful view, the cool breeze, and their own conversations and falsetto music.

The passengers who are bent on getting from one city to another are few, and even they when they happen to be in couples or trios whistle, marking time with their canes, and keep step like militiamen on drill. The police seem to a nervous man very few indeed. They appear to favor lounging at the ends of the bridge under the depots, but at all hours at least one or two are apt to be found between the anchorages. There is no hour at night when women are not met on the way across, and though some of them may be tipsy creatures of the streets, there are other women with manly escorts, who appear to be reputable, and to have been kept late at pleasure gatherings. As the night wears on, between midnight and daybreak, single passengers often find themselves alone on one of the three divisions of the bridge. Soon after daylight, however, the rush to New York begins.—N. Y. Sun.

HEAD OF CENTRAL.

Merriam & Co's. Coal Yard.

Many thousand tons of anthracite and bituminous coal, making up the cargoes of numerous steam and sail colliers, enter Beverly and Salem harbors in the course of a month. The greater portion is either consigned to Salem companies or is discharged at the Reading pier, to be loaded and conveyed by rail to distant inland points lacking the facilities of navigation. Coal in bulk, as it lies at the mines, is comparatively cheap in comparison to the prices paid for it by householders to local retailers. The transportation rates added to the margin cleared by retailers nearly double the original cost per ton, and renders it quite an expensive adjunct to domestic necessities.

One of the most enterprising firms in the coal business in the immediate neighborhood of Peabody, is that of Merriam & Co., foot of River street, Danversport. This company originally controlled extensive yards near the Liberty street bridge, but owing to the disadvantages arising from the lack of tide water, the present site was enclosed and built upon, about a year ago. The present coal sheds and their adjoining buildings now cover about an acre, and are constructed upon plans which greatly facilitate the manipulation of the immense quantities of coal received by them during a year.

The colliers are towed by tugs from the outer harbor through the Beverly slips and up the river to the wharf, where their cargoes are discharged. The discharging wharf, which would not be an unsightly highway, extends perhaps 140 feet into the river and a depth of 17 feet is attained, thus allowing large vessels to be easily unloaded without the annoyance of lightering. The large colliers which now discharge at the new location, could not be roped alongside of the dock at Liberty street, on account of the shallowness of the river, even at high tide. But this difficulty has been obviated, and large vessels which would ground long before they reached the old yards, are easily accommodated at the River street wharf. The vessels to be unloaded are clewed broadside to the wharf and directly amidships to its entrance. This position brings the hatchway, opening into the hole where the cargo is stowed, directly beneath an elevated trestlework which forms a second wharf about twenty feet above the main one: and over this wharf the coal is carted to the pockets, within the sheds. A stationary, reversible, verticle engine of six or eight horse power, furnishes the requisite power for hoisting the coal. At the extreme water front of the wharf is a powerful derrick with a movable boom on a level with the upper wharf, and through the end of this boom a strong chain is run from the rotary drum of the engine to the bucket which lifts the coal from within the vessel. Usually nine men are employed in removing a cargo; four shovelers, four wheelers and an engineer. The shovelers fill the bucket and in an instant the engine hoists and swings it to the wheelers, who tip its contents into their two wheeled carts, and by the time the bucket again descends into the hole, the shovelers have filled a spare bucket which is immediately hooked to the chain and lifted out. So the operation is continued. About 200 tons are daily transferred from the vessels to the pockets, of which there are eight and averaging about 250 tons in capacity. An able bodied wheeler can push a cart before him containing more than a half ton of coal and requiring two buckets to fill it. Before the introduction of derricks, a pully was rigged between the fore and main masts and through its eye a rope was rove, connecting the bucket with the engine. This method is still used, but it has its disadvantages and dangers.

The firm which we have noticed in this article, ships coal from Philadelphia and New York, and usually obtain their supply from the celebrated Kohinore and Bare Ridge mines. The business is not confined to the coal trade alone. Through the course of a year many tons of sand are received from Plum Island, Newburyport and various other points along the North Shore. Wood is also brought in from the country and also from Nova Scotia. A 200 ton barge is now in course of building under their supervision. It will be used for lightering, pleasure parties, etc., and will be towed by a tugboat. Every detail connected with this establishment, immense as it is, is in perfect order, and seems to be just what is required for its particular place. In fact, so far as our knowledge is concerned, we should consider it a model from which many other firms in the same business might copy to advantage.

As we have examined the remarkable merits of the People's Cyclopedia, we are prepared to give a few reasons for preferring it above other Cyclopedias of similar aim. Instead of having long dissertions and professional essays on subjects, it treats them in a popular manner, directly to the point, much more desirable to all people in this busy age. We find fullness where fullness is demanded and brevity where brevity suffices, making it for reference far more convenient than the larger Cyclopedias, and notwithstanding its cheapness, in point of practical utility, is as valuable as the most costly. It has nearly double as many subjects as either Brittanica's, Appleton's or Chamber's; all their errors are corrected, and, besides, it is brought down to the present time. Contains a complete Atlas, and its Appendix treats of over twenty thousand different subjects, features which no other Cyclopedias contain. For general information there is no work in the world that compares with it—always ready, and always sure to give in a moment the facts desired. No one who would be up with the times should be without it. It is an educator in the family, to the farmer, to the mechanic and in the counting room, as well as to the professional man, and its price puts it into the hands of all, even to those who have the other Cyclopedias. Adelbert E. Cady is the agent, stopping at Mrs. H. O. Wiley's.

The Grand Lodge of Massachusetts convened at Odd Fellows' Hall, Boston, last week, it being the regular annual session. The financial reports of Grand Secretary, Treasurer and Trustees represented the financial condition of the Grand Lodge as in good condition. From the report of the Grand Secretary we make the following extracts: Total number of members, 28,264, showing a net gain in the past six months of 781; 1283 have been initiated, 90 admitted by card and 33 reinstated; 113 have withdrawn by card and 154 have died; number of degrees conferred, 3935; $32,431.13 has been paid to 1646 members for 10,514 weeks' sick benefits; $2,430.23 has been paid for the relief of 213 widowed families; $6712.21 has been paid for burying the dead, and $4626.25 has been paid for other charitable purposes. The total amount of money received by the Lodges during the past six months was $154,531.12. The following were duly elected and installed as officers for the ensuing year: Samuel Cochran, Grand Master; Henry K. Braley, Deputy Grand Master; Edwin L. Pilsbury, Grand Warden; Charles D. Cole, Grand Secretary; Julius L. Clarke, Grand Treasurer; Francis Jewett, Representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge; James Marble, Trustee of Funds; S. P. Lawrence, Grand Marshal; R. W. Tabor, Grand Conductor; R. M. Eastman, Grand Guardian; Wm. Parkman, Grand Chaplain; Geo. W. Hayden, Grand Herald; E. D. Bancroft, Grand Instructor; James M. Price, Assistant Grand Instructor.

One of the most pleasing features, says the Denver Republican, in the National Encampment on Thursday, was the presentation to General George S. Merrill, of Massachusetts, Past Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, of an elegant jeweled badge of the order. The badge had been prepared by order of the National Encampment at Baltimore, last year, and was presented to General Merrill on behalf of the National Encampment, by Comrade Manderson, United States Senator from Nebraska. Comrade Manderson made an eloquent speech of presentation, recalling the great services rendered to the Grand Army of the Republic by General Merrill, and the very high appreciation of him by the entire body of the Grand Army of the Republic. General Merrill replied in a very feeling way, and the enthusiastic manner in which he was received by the Encampment, showed how warm a place he holds in the hearts of all the comrades. The badge is of solid gold, about six inches in length, surmounted by a gold eagle. Next below is the rank bar, bearing four stars, each one of which is a diamond, pendant to which is the corps badge of the Nineteenth Army Corps, in the center of which is a large diamond. Hanging from the rank bar, by heavy gold chains, is the badge of the G. A. R., surrounded by a heavy gold laurel wreath. The badge is inscribed on the back as follows: "The National Eacampment to Comrade Geo. S. Merrill, in hearty appreciation of his distinguished services."

The excursion of the shoe and leather trade and its collateral branches is now being agitated, and the committee are putting matters into tangible shape, so that the fifth annual excursion will take place early in August. It is proposed to charter the Empire State, Capt. J. M. Phillips, and to make the trip along the north shore of Massachusetts Bay. The music will be supplied by vocal talent, in addition to the military band and orchestra. There will be two concerts in the saloon, one in the forenoon and one in the afternoon. The boat will leave Ratterv Wharf at 10 A. M., returning and landing passengers promptly at 5 P. M., in season for them to take the evening trains from the city. Managers E. Burt Phillips and H. A. M'Glenen will be pretty certain to make the occasion enjoyable. Ladies and children will be among the excursionists, and it is confidently expected that this occasion will be one of the most enjoyable of the season.

FREE SCHOLARSHIP.

In accordance with the annexed resolve, approved June 2, 1883, in favor of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, at Amherst, whereby eighty free scholarships are established, said scholarships to be assigned equally to each Senatorial district, Senator William Sparhawk, of the Second Essex District, embracing town of Marblehead, city of Salem, towns of Peabody and Lynnfield, has invited William D. T. Trefry, Esq., of Marblehead, Prof. D. B. Hagar, of Salem, and Amos Merrill, Esq., of Peabody, to act as an examining board to test the qualifications of any one who may decide to enter into a competitive examination, in writing, for the mentioned gratuitous scholarships upon the following subjects: English grammar, geography, arithmetic, algebra, through simple equations, and the history of the United States.

The first term of the collegiate year opens Thursday, Sept. 13, 1883. Parties who wish to enter an examination for the above free scholarships will send name and address to Senator William Sparhawk, P. O. Box 207, Marblehead, Mass, who will inform them of the time and place of the examination.

The above presents a most excellent opportunity for two of the young men of the district to secure a sound practical education at a cost that has been reduced to a minimum. Tuition is free. Room rent $15 00 to $30 00 per year, according to location of room; board from $90.00 to $130.00 a year; total necessary expenses from $175 to $250 per year; one half of which the student can earn by his labor if he so desires.

Chapter 46 of the Acts and Resolves of the General Court for 1883 reads as follows: That annually for the term of four years eighty free scholarships be and hereby are established at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, the same to be given by appointment to persons in this Commonwealth after a competitive examination under the rules prescribed by the President of the College at such time and place as the Senator then in office from each district shall designate, and the said scholarships shall be assigned equally to each Senatorial district, but if there shall be less than two successful applicants for scholarships from any Senatorial district, such scholarships may be distributed by the President of the College equally among the other Districts, as nearly as possible, but no applicant shall be entitled to a scholarship unless he shall pass an examination in accordance with the rules to be established as herein before provided. aug 1—4t

An Invitation.

BY THE LATE WILLIS GAYLORD CLARK.

"They that seek me early shall find me."

Come, while the blossoms of thy years are brightest,
Thou youthful wanderer, in a flowery maze;
Come, while the restless heart is bounding lightest,
And joy's pure sunbeams tremble in thy ways;
Come, while sweet thoughts, like summer buds unfolding,
Waken rich feelings in the careless breast;
While yet thy hand the ephemeral wreath is holding—
Come, and secure interminable rest.

Soon will the freshness of thy days be over,
And thy free buoyancy of soul be flown:
Pleasure will fold her wing, and friend and lover,
Will to the embraces of the worm have gone;
Those who now love thee will have pass'd forever—
Their looks of kindness will be lost to thee;
Thou wilt need balm to heal thy spirit's fever,
As thy sick heart broods over years to be.

Come, while the morning of thy life is glowing,— Ere the dim phantoms thou art chasing die;
Ere the gay spell which earth is round thee throwing,
Fade like the sunset of a summer sky;
Life has but shadows, save a promise given,
Which lights the future with a fadeless ray;
Oh, touch the sceptre—win a hope in heaven—
Come, turn thy spirit from the world away.

Then will the crosses of this brief existence
Seem airy nothings to thine ardent soul,
And shining brightly in the forward distance,
Will, of thy patient race, appear the goal;
Home of the weary!—where in peace reposing,
The spirit lingers in unclouded bliss;
Though o'er its dust the curtained grave is closing—
Who would not, EARLY, choose a lot like this?

Since Mickey Got Kilt in the War.

BY T. H. LESLIE.

"A pinsion-claim agent? Will, then, sor,
You're the man that I'm wanting to see.
I've a claim for a pinsion that's due me,
And I want yez to git it for me.
Will, no, sor, I never was wounded,
For, the fact is, I didn't inlisht;
Though I would have been off in the army
Had I not had a boil on me fist.

"But me b'y, me poor Mickey was kilt, sor!
And when poets the story shall till,
Sure the counthry will soon be erecting
A monument there where he fill!
He was not cut into wid a saber,
Nor struck wid a big cannon ball,
But he lepped from a foor-story windy,
An', bedad, he got kilt in the fall!

"Yis, it was a rash lep to be making;
But, in faith, thin, he had to, I'm sure,
For he h'ard them ashlaming and banging
An' a thrying to break in his dure!
They were going to capture poor Mickey,
An' to kape from their clutches, poor b'y,
He had to lep out out of the windy,
An' indade, it was foor stories high!

"No, it wan't the fall, sor, that kilt him,
It was the stopping so suddint, you see.
Whin he got to the bottom it jarred him,
An' that kilt him as dead as could be.
Och! he loved the owld flag, did brave Mickey!
An' he died for his counthry, although
He was not kilt in battle exactly—
He was lepping the bounties, you know.

"'Twas the marshal was afther him! yis, sor!
An' in fact, he was right at the dure,
When he made the lep out of the windy:
An' he never lepped bounties no more!
So, of coorse, I'm intitled to pinsion,
An' the owld woman, too, is, because
We were both, sor, dipindint on Mickey,
The darling, brave b'y that he was.

"Av coorse, you'll not have anny throuble,
So go on wid yez now, sor, and fill
Out a lot of thim blank affydavits,
An' I'll swear to them all, so I will.
It is swate, yis, to die for wan's counthry;
But, indade, I can't hilp but abhor
Thim battles where people get hurted—
Since Mickey got kilt in the war.

Selected Story.

"Nonsense—all nonsense!" said Uncle Gregsbury, tapping his office rule impatiently among the maelstrom of law papers that covered the green baize desk. "You girls do get such chimerical ideas into your heads!"

Theodora March colored scarlet. Uncle Gregsbury had always been considered an oracle in the family, and no one ventured to dispute his dictums, but this was a life-and death affair with poor Theo, and she felt that she could not let the matter pass without a feeble remonstrance or two.

"But, uncle, what are we to do? Kate is too weak to sit up yet; mamma is utterly overpowered by the suddenness and violence of our affliction; and then our debts starting up in every direction. Money we must have!"

Uncle Gregsbury involuntarily buttoned up his trowsers pockets at this last appeal.

Theodora saw the gesture and smiled bitterly.

"I should think you might open a boarding-house," said Mr. Gregsbury.

"Our house is not sufficiently large."

"Take another one, then."

"And who is to go security for the rent?" asked Theo, quietly.

"Oh! that's another question," said Uncle Gregsbury, rubbing his nose. "Or a little school, now."

"The neighborhood is overstocked with little schools already," answered Theo, almost impatiently. "Kate counted nine within a dozen blocks, last night."

"Well, all this isn't particularly to the point," seizing the poker and giving the fire a tremendous poke. "You asked me if I thought you would succeed as an artist. I said no."

"But you didn't give me any satisfactory reason for that decision," persisted Theo.

"Nobody would buy a woman's products," Mr. Gregsbury snapped, beginning to get very tired of his niece and her importunities. "Wishy-washy, crude things such as wouldn't fetch a penny in the market—time and money thrown away."

"For all that," said Theo, gravely, "I've a mind to try."

"Just as you please, of course," said Uncle Gregsbury, seizing at an excuse for terminating the distasteful interview, "only I beg that you will remember my advice, Theodora. And now, as I expect Dodsley about that coal mine business in about half an hour—"

And so Theo March took her departure, with heightened color and her lips pressed firmly together.

"Poor mamma's own brother, too!" she murmured to herself. "One would think he might spare us a little out of his abundance. Oh, what a cruel, selfish world this is!"

Uncle Gregsbury, meanwhile, had his own opinions on the subject.

"What cormorants these poor relations are!" quoth he, as he leaned back in his chair, and listened to the light sound of his niece's departing footsteps. "I paid March's doctor's bill, and the rent for a month, and I wonder what more they would have? I certainly can't be burdened with the support of the whole family. I'm a poor man myself. Kate must go out as a governess, and Theo must sew, or turn companion or something, I don't care much which. As for picture painting, bah!"

So at the close of the day's work Uncle Gregsbury went down town, and selected a set of Neapolitan corals for his wife, and a silver dressing-case for his daughter Pussy, and a pair of diamond sleeve-buttons for himself.

"I've made a good deal of money out of that Dodsley case," quoth this "poor man." "And I don't see why I can't afford myself a little treat once in a while."

In the meantime Theo went home, and had a good cry.

"He's our only relation," said Theo. "It does seem as if he might have been a little kinder."

"Of course you'll give up your idea of turning artist now," said Mrs. March, a little, faded out creature, with a chameleon-like aptitude for taking the ideas and opinions of others.

"Indeed, I shall not!" retorted Theo, with a bright red spot rising to each of her cheeks. "I am going to see Mr. Kensington at once about it."

Mr. Karl Kensington was that rara avis—a successful artist. In the days of his struggling, earlier efforts, he had given lessons in the Ledburg Institute, and Theodora March had been his favorite pupil. To him, therefore, she resorted, and immediately told her simple tale.

"Would you honestly advise me to try?" she asked piteously, when all was related.

"I would advise you to try," he answered.

With these frank, encouraging words a new dawn of hope and cheer rose up in Theo's despairing heart. She went home and turned a little north room into a sort of impromptu studio, established the easel in the proper light, and here she went to work with a will.

"What is your subject to be?" asked Kate, the invalid sister.

"Oh, I don't know yet," Theo answered, vaguely—"something soft and dreamy, full of sad peace, yellowed all over with autumn sunshine, I think. I can see glimpses of it with my eyes shut, and I believe I can reproduce my idea on canvas."

And at the end of two or three weeks the little picture was finished, and sent to Mr. Kensington's studio for inspection.

"It is a good thing," said the artist, after a minute or two's grave study, of perspective, coloring and general expression.

Theo's heart gave a great, upward pulse; her cheeks reddened.

"Do you say so out of kindly pity to me, or because you really think so?" she involuntarily cried out.

"Because I really think so. Keep on with pencil and pallette, Theo March. There is a divine spark of genius in your nature, and it is for you to foster it with diligent labor and steady, untiring effort. Leave this picture here, and I will try to sell it for you.—What do you call it?"

"'An October Day!'"

"And what is the price?"

"Twenty dollars!"

"Twenty fiddlesticks! I'll see to that myself," said Mr. Kensington.

And Theodora went away quite dejected, lest she had seemed greedy and grasping in Mr. Kensington's eyes.

"I did work very hard on it," she mused; "and I thought twenty dollars wouldn't be too much for it. But perhaps beginners must be satisfied with small remuneration at first. I wish I had said ten."

Mr. Karl Kensington had scarcely been alone in his studio half an hour before there came an insinuating tap at the door, and Mr. Gregsbury himself sidled in.

"I hope you are at liberty this morning, Mr. Kensington," said he, obsequiously—for Mr. Gregsbury had a great deal of admiration for successful men.

"As much so as I ever am," said Kensington, who, on his side, despised mere money makers in general, and Philo Gregsbury in particular.

"Glad to hear it, I'm sure," said Gregsbury, with his hat in front of him. "But of course you great artists are always busy, but I'll not detain you longer than I can help. The fact is, I want to buy a picture."

"Indeed!" said Mr. Keniston, with an indifference that determined Gregsbury to buy or die.

"Its my wife's birthday, you see, and I would like to surprise her with a gem—a real gem."

"I'm afraid mine are pretty nearly all ordered," remarked the artist, painting vigorously away.

"Such as this, now," said Gregsbury, pausing in front of the little easel, on which gleamed the red-and-russet foliage and hazy atmosphere of the "October Day." "This would suit me exactly, if—if it isn't bespoken."

Mr. Kensington languidly turned his head around.

"Well, that isn't, I believe, as yet. Mr. Chesterfield Jones is to be here at three o'clock, and—"

"I'll give as much for it as Chesterfield Jones will," sputtered Gregsbury, nettled by the mention of a neighbor of his—"I'll give a hundred dollars!"

Kensington hesitated.

"Or say a hundred and fifty," went on the eager lawyer. "I don't mind an extra dollar or two when I've set my mind on a thing. And that's such an exquisite little bit of sunshine and color. Just what my wife would like."

"Mr. Chesterfield Jones has made me no offer as yet, of course," said Kensington, deliberately, "but—"

"A hundred and seventy-five!" cried Mr. Gregsbury, excitedly. "Come, now, I'll write out the checque at once for you."

Mr. Kensington finally assented to the offer, and Gregsbury hurried off, with his treasure under his arm, feeling as if he had evidently obtained a bargain.

"Never saw anything prettier in my life," said he to Mrs. Gregsbury, as he removed the brown paper coverings from his prize. "A gem—a perfect gem!"

And in honor of the new purchase, he invited his sister and her girls to tea, together with the Chesterfield Jones', and a half-dozen other aspiring neighbors.

"I have been buying a new picture, as a present to Mrs. Gregsbury," said he, loftily, when all the guests were assembled. "I'd like you to see it."

Mr. Chesterfield Jones pricked up his ears as the host threw open the folding-doors, displaying thereby the painting over the mantle, in all its glow and depth of colors.

"Upon my word, it is a beauty!" reluctantly admitted Chesterfield Jones, with his eye-glass to his eyes. "I shouldn't wonder if you had paid a cool two hundred for it, Gregsbury."

"I got it for a hundred and seventy-five," returned Gregsbury, gleefully rubbing his hands together. "The cheapest thing I've seen in a long time. Just look at the coloring, will you? And the hills in the background, and—"

"Why," cried Kate March, beginning at last to rally from her extreme surprise, "it's our The's picture! It's the 'October Day!'"

"Eh?" cried Mr. Gregsbury.

"Yes," said Theo, with a flush of conscious pride; "I painted that!"

"But I bought it of Kensington!" ejaculated her uncle.

"Very possible. He promised to sell it for me."

"Only think," cried poor, pale little Mrs. March, throwing both arms around her daughter's neck, "of our Theo earning a hundred and seventy-five dollars!"

Mr. Chesterfield Jones elbowed himself forward at this moment.

"If this is really Miss Theodora March's work," quoth he, "I would be glad to engage her to paint me a companion piece. I'll give you the same price, Miss March, for a winter picture."

And Theo, with great outward dignity, but inward exultation, accepted the commission.

"What do you think now, uncle," said she, in a sly whisper, as they all sat down to the tea table, "about women artists?"

"I don't profess to be able to keep up with this age at all," said Uncle Gregsbury, pettishly.

But he was none the less proud of the "October Day."—Helen Forrest Graves.

WHAT OUR BOY SAYS.

The old house on Central street is a disgrace to the town and the owner.

That it was too bad for the boys to make a target of it, but he couldn't resist the temptation.

The new town house is an imposing looking structure.

That he wants a position as usher, and has begun to get the printer's ink off his hands and practice with a button hole bouquet in anticipation.

That his family wants him to get married.

That his only objection is, that the school houses are already over full.

The circumcumstances were such that young Mr. Tawmus and Deacon Rich, whose daughter he hoped to marry, were caught by night in a storm and were compelled to stop at a farm house, where only one bed was to be obtained. So they slept together. Somehow Tawmus got to dreaming of those speaking tubes which connect the rooms in all first class hotels with the office. Being in imagination at one of these tubes, he got Deacon Rich by the ear, put his lips to it and yelled in stentorian tones which nearly split the old gentleman's head: "Bring me a gin cocktail, D. Q.!" That awakened Deacon Rich and he awakened his companion and demanded an explanation, which Mr. Tawmus found it very difficult to make and which he feels sure was not satisfactory.

Men who belong to the press, and who, by the nature of their duties, have been brought into frequent and intimate communication with telegraph operators, have but one opinion in regard to their character, and that is, that they are an intelligent, painstaking and conscientious class of workers, who are deserving of much higher pay than that which is earned by a common street laborer. While far from justifying strikes (this phrase is stereotyped, ready for use at all times,) we cannot refrain from expressing our sympathy with the operators, and our hope that they may secure a rate of compensation that will be proportionate to the profits earned by the monopoly which exists by their labor.—Somerville Journal.

Johnnie was in the street car yesterday with his mother, and next to him sat a very nice looking young man. After some talk with his mother, Johnnie turned to the young man and said so somebody could hear him:

"Am I a dude?"

"Well," replied the young man, "you don't look like one."

"And is that gentleman on the other side of you a dude?"

"I suppose not; but why do you want to know, my little fellow?"

"Nothing," only mamma said you was the next thing to a dude, and I wanted to know if it was me or the other gentleman she meant."—Merchant Traveler.

Miscellaneous.

THE BAGGAGEMAN. — This is the season when the festive baggageman is in his glory. It is the time when the trunks and satchels of the summer tourist moveth about from place to place, and it gives the baggageman much joy to knock the supreme filling out of the trunk belonging to the summer tourist. Of course the day is not far distant now when he will have a chance at the heavy iron-bound sample case of the commercial traveller, who starts out to rope in the fall and winter trade. But the average baggageman will turn from the drummer's trunk in disgust to get one whack at the light, airy, tourist's Saratoga, filled with lawn dresses, straw hats, rouge and hay-fever medicine. A baggageman of one season's experience can tell a tourist's trunk the moment his eye rests upon it, and unless he can at this season burst two or three a day and scatter their contents all over the depot platform, he is morose and melancholy the rest of the season. He delights in making a target of the tourist's trunk, and trying to throw the sample case of the drummer through it at least two out of three times. And still much has been said regarding the baggageman that is cruel and uncharitable, when one takes into consideration what he has to contend with each day. Aside from the usual lot of regular baggage he is obliged to handle, this season forces upon him a varied assortment of baby carriages, and similar truck, all of which he is enjoined to treat tenderly, and is set out on the platform of the summer resort tenderly. Then he has several cases, "private," of champagne, three or four dog kennels with their canine occupants, which he is expected to feed, water, and care for along the route, besides innumerable little packages to be dropped off at different stations for this and that friend, until it is a wonder that he is not in the "incurable" ward in some insane hospital before the season is over. He is expected to do all these favors, aside from his regular duties, which are enough for four men. To see him penned up in his narrow den, behind mountains of baggage, with one suspender down, and nothing on but shirt and pants and in a profuse perspiration, it is enough to call out sympathy for this hard working class, and it is, instead of being a wonder how they find time to shatter so much baggage, a great wonder that they do not in moments of sheer desperation, brain the man who sneaks up to the car door and pushes aboard a baby carriage, a bird cage, several paper boxes and a coop of game fowls, with the request that they be kindly cared for and set off at such a station,—it is a wonder that the baggageman does not throw a big trunk out on the fiend, then go out and sit on it till the train pulls out.

A HOT WEATHER PUZZLE.—Sojourners at the sea-shore are going crazy over a little mathematical problem which has puzzled some wise heads.—Its solution is easy as "rolling off a log" if you "catch on," and if you do not, it looks like a paradox. It is this: Two boys have 30 apples each. One sells them at the rate of three for one cent, and of course realizes 10 cents; the other sells his at two for a cent and gets 15 cents—a total of 25 cents for 60 apples; and as each time that one boy sells three apples for a cent the other sells two for another cent, it will be seen that five apples are disposed of for two cents. Now send out a man with 60 apples to be sold at five for two cents (5 goes into 60 12 times, and 2 times 12 are 24) and he only receives 24 cents. The PRESS will be glad to receive and print answers to the question, What becomes of the odd cent?

The Watchman, Boston, presents Gov. Butler in no flattering light when it says:

"Daniel Webster in one of his great speeches in Congress more than a half century ago said, 'I shall enter on no encomium of Massachusetts; there she stands; behold her and judge for yourselves.' The spirit which animated the great expounder of the Constitution was at this point quite in contrast with the spirit of the present Governor of this ancient Commonwealth. Webster knew full well the traditions and history of Massachusetts, and cherished them with patriotic devotion. He and statesmen of his stamp never forgot to be ruled by the inspiration of a true patriotism—a patriotism that could have never found delight in maligning a great Commonwealth more than a filial son would find in defaming his own mother."

"Good morning, John," said one of the leading Presbyterian pastors in Scranton, Pa., to a young friend whom he met on the street the first warm day of the season; "how does the old man stand the heat?" The young man made no reply, but went his way with a clouded brow. And when the good pastor earned that the young man's father had died only a week before, he understood why his cordial greeting was met so coldly.

Editorial Correspondence.

The town of Fairhaven, Mass., where is our present sojourn, is one of the pleasantest resorts, for rest and quiet, on our sea coast. There is no beach, it is true; but there is an abundance of boating and fishing. While the cool breezes of the evening, coming from the bay which forms the lower harbor of New Bedford and Fairhaven, make a refreshing change from the heat of the more dusty city across the river. Before the war, the business of whaling was extensively carried on both here and in New Bedford. But since that time this industry has declined, and manufacturing has taken its place. The town is small in population, but covers an area of about three miles square; large flag stone walks are laid in the principal streets at considerable length, rendering pedestrian travel easy at all times.

The town lies just across the river from New Bedford, and is connected therewith by a bridge, over which the New Bedford and Fairhaven Horse Railroad runs, the branch to Fairhaven being opened in October, 1872. Travel on this branch is very large in the summer time, on Sundays reminding us of the new horse railroad to Lynn, every car being crowded. The New Bedford people take the open cars, which are of about the same pattern as are run on our roads, and ride across the bridge to Fairhaven, in many cases returning without leaving the car. The cash fare, for over two miles travel, is 5 cents. Others take the road down the side of the water to Fort Phœnix, which affords with the rocks and small beach a delightful resort for picnics. There is a grove near by, and here are held at various times by the different churches of the town those clam bakes which have justly become so famous in this region. From the top of a small elevation on this point of land can be obtained a magnificent view of the harbor, and its lights and islands, while there is always a refreshing breeze. Here would be a fine place for the erection of a summer hotel, which will sometime, no doubt, be done. The present hotel has a large patronage, and the number of people who find Fairhaven a pleasant summer resort, is constantly increasing. The present hotel is kept in the best manner, and by the aid of rooms in the neighboring houses, a limited number of those who desire to find lodgment here are accommodated. A large hotel is imperatively needed here. The present landlady would gladly lease such an one. As it is she does the best she can with her limited accommodations.

As we mentioned, manufacturing enterprises have taken the place of whaling both here and in the opposite city. In the latter place are large cotton mills, notably the Wamsutta, whose productions are known in every household, and have a world-wide reputation. There are also glass works and other industries, giving employment to large numbers of people. In the former place the principal industry is the works of the American Tack Co., which, including the houses adjoining and land belonging to the company occupy an area of about fifteen acres besides a fine wharf 30 feet long. The business was started in 1865, and in 1866, the following year, the trade mark and good will of Jude Field of New York was purchased, making this company the successors of A. Field, of New York, one of the first to begin the manufacture of tacks in this country. Subsequently they purchased the machinery of Martin G. Williams, of Raynham, with an established trade in chisel pointed boat nails, and in 1875, the business of M. M. Rhodes & Sons of Taunton, was transferred here. This gave them the lining nail trade, Rhodes being the original manufacturer of lining and saddle nails; by machinery These three branches combined, gave the company an advantage at the outset, and they have maintained the reputation of producing a superior quality of work. Swedish iron is mostly used in the manufacture of tacks. This company use also domestic iron and in the different branches of their business large quantities of zinc, copper, brass and steel. The Swedish iron is imported by them in bars, and is sent to the rolling mills to be rolled into thin strips for use. Of these mills there are but five in this country capable of rolling iron sufficiently thin to be used in the manufacture of tacks. The iron is first cut into proper lengths and put in weak sulphuric acid and afterwards into a solution of lime. The effect of this process is to take off the hard scales which have formed on the iron in the process of rolling, and this enables the manufacturer to run his knives a longer time. The iron is then cut into narrow strips of different widths as is required for the length of the tacks which are made, when they are ready for the machine which converts the iron at once into tacks. There are two kinds of machines for this work, the Blanchard and Reed machine. The former is the one most used, and the company have seventy-two of these of four different sizes as required for the sizes of tacks. This machine is of American invention, Mr. Thomas Blanchard, the inventor, of Sutton, Mass., having been a very ingenious mechanic. While making tacks by hand Mr. Blanchard conceived the idea of the machine and after it was perfected about 250 tacks per minute could be made. This with the Reed machine has superseded all others.

This company also manufacture wire nails, which is a new industry, comparatively, in this country. These nails are used for moldings, and are plain and corrugated. Formerly they were imported from England, but under the new tariff it is anticipated that a more extensive business will be developed. They use also a button back machine, which is an ingenious and complicated piece of mechanism for making button backs. It is the invention of one of the workmen of the company, and is the only one in use in Massachusetts. They use strips of tin which is used in canning, being the waste pieces usually thrown away by the manufacturers of tin cans. Large quantities of these cans are made in Oregon, and the company have just received an invoice of fourteen tons of these strips from Oregon, sent here by vessel. The different kinds and varieties of tacks, nails, etc., made by the American Tack Co. are almost innumerable. They include the different sizes of boat nails, the ndustry of Martin G. Williams, which we have previously mentioned. A large room is filled with samples of the different kinds, and another is devoted to the storage of the paper required in packing the goods. The main building is 175x40 feet, with a stone ell of 70x30. A new store house has recently been constructed in addition, 70x25. There is a blacksmith and machine shop connected, all the machines in use at the factory being made by experienced workmen, at the establishment. The engine is 75 horse power. There are three tubular boilers set with Jarvis' patent. They use coal screenings and bituminous coal together, and the agent speaks very gratifyingly of the Jarvis patent, and is satisfied that it is a great saving of fuel.

The whole of this immense business is under the charge of Cyrus D. Hunt, who has been the agent of the company from the beginning. About 125 people are employed in the factory, a portion of them women. About 500 tons of coal are required yearly; about 600 tons of Swedish Iron, and nearly the same amount of domestic. The sales of the company aver age $250,000. They are running at present on half time; and have averaged for the past six years to run only three quarter time. There has been a large overproduction, neeessitating sharp competition in the sale of their goods, and more machines are in use in the different factories than is required for ordinary production. The business, like many others, is largely overdone.

There are two daily newspapers in New Bedford which have a good circulation in this vicinity; the Mercury, which is published in the morning and the Standard in the evening. Last year at this time the Standard was pushing the boom for Crapo in this section, and it is more than evident to the careful observer that the Republicans here feel sore over the result of last year. They are confident that Butler could have been defeated with Crapo as the nominee of the party. Many of them took so little interest that they did not vote at all. This year it will be different. With a leader harmonious to all sections they will rally in force, and with a prospect of success.

Fairhaven possesses a weekly paper, the Star, a bright, newsy sheet published by C. D. Waldron. It was started about five years ago in a small form, as an advertising sheet, and was circulated free. But the success of the venture was so apparent, and the people of Fairhaven are so interested in what pertains to their native town, that Mr. Waldron was induced to continue its publication. He enlarged it and published for the subscription price of 50 cents per year. Subsequently the price was advanced to $1.00 and the paper again enlarged. The Star have just moved into a new office on the Main street, added a larger press, and in future will print the whole of the paper at home. They have a good advertising patronage from New Bedford and a profitable circulation.

There are two Odd Fellows' Lodges in New Bedford, Acushnet Lodge being the older and larger. In fact, the other is an offshoot from Acushnet. We had the pleasure of visiting this lodge at its regular meeting, and found them comfortably situated in a large and elegantly fitted hall. They number about 350 members. Some three years since they hired the attic of a large building on the Main street, nearly unfinished, took a lease of it for ten years, and proceeded to fit it up. They held a fair for two weeks which was a great success, the Odd Fellows of the city being not only numerous but greatly interested in their organization. About $3000 was made by this fair, and the result is an elegant hall and ante rooms, with library, of which they have good reason to be proud. J. P. F.

What a pity it is that the prohibitionists are this year to go through the farce of holding a state convention for the purpose of nominating candidates who will not receive a total of five thousand votes. It would be more sensible to unite with one or the other of the two parties—that from which prohibitionists have received most benefit and in which they can find the greater sympathy.—Waltham Record.

Mrs. Langtry settled the pug dog question just before she left for England. In an interview with a reporter she said she hated pug dogs and thought any woman who talked baby talk to the little pets acted very foolish indeed.—That's just the way; you can't tell anything about the fashions among women. Some of them fancy a pug dog and others prefer a dude.

A revival meeting—A camphor bottle and a fainting woman's nose.

An Old New England Church.

Does the New England church of the olden days now exist, or has it departed and been laid away to rest, where the New England fathers sleep? Is our knowledge of that church only to be gained from the histories or the stories with which our libraries may chance to be furnished? Have we only pictures of the old steeples and sheds? only a few photographs of the venerable men and women who used to fill the pews as regularly as the Sabbath came, who, after listening awhile to see that the minister was going to develop his theme in the regular orthodox manner, yielded themselves to the overpowering inclination to sleep—an inclination which they seemed to consider no sin to gratify at the church, however bad it might be to take a whole day for that purpose at their homes?

I think the photographs, and the pictures, and the stories, and the histories are by no means all. I know they are not, for, dear old Pilgrim fathers, I have seen them with my own eyes, and they have hitched their horses in the same sheds, they have climbed the same steps, they have reverently walked into the same church, and though they kept awake a little longer because a strange voice was trying to preach to them the Word, after a while they slept the same contented, solemn, churchly sleep.

And the dear Pilgrim mothers—they have come in from their well-kept homes, the Sabbath indeed a day of rest to them, the cares of the home left behind, to receive comfort in their possibly obscure life from the word of One who had not where to lay His head. Wide awake, they have turned over their Bibles till they found and marked the text. Keenly appreciative, they are ready to discuss the doctrine and the duty of the sermon. They have staid to the Sabbath-school. They have taken the hand of their own good pastor; they have talked of the latest birth, and anxiously sought to know the condition of the good deacon, whose feet are in the border-land, and whose eye is opening very clearly to the sights which lie a little beyond our earthly range—and they have gone back to their homes on the hill-sides and down among the valleys, just as their fathers, who are sleeping in the grave yard, back of the church, did a hundred years ago.

No, it is not yet a mere tradition—it has not yet gone wholly past; it is not alone a story which those of good memory or imagination can tell—this story, the life and being of the Old New England church.

In the midst of a village, so quiet even during the week days that one might imagine it a perpetual Sunday, stands the old white church, its three decked steeple surmounted by the traditional fish, so often deemed proper by the New England fathers to be placed upon the church tower to indicate the course of the winds. Clear across its front run the broad stone steps by which the devout worshipper approaches the door of the Lord's house. Without an ornament of any sort to distract the worshipper's attention; with none of God's sunlight hindered from its approach by broidered curtains or stained glass; with everything left to-day just as the early fathers left it when they were carried out to be laid away to rest, this old church has come down into the present like an old picture put in among the new and fresher works of modern art. The congregation until recently sang from the same old book which the fathers loved. They turn their Bible leaves to find their pastor's text; they follow him as he reads the morning's lessons; they take the attitude in prayer and praise which the generations in New England long loved. A hundred years the life of the church has gone on much as it goes to-day. True, in the progress of the years, their first building grew too small and they built larger, but they did not tear it down, and it, too, lives to-day, though devoted to secular uses.

Their first pastor came in their infancy and staid until his death. Their second did his life-work with them, and lived in the town until he died.—Their third also died in their service. Their fourth preached to them almost forty years, and then was parted from with large and deep regret, and their fifth has entered upon his decade of service with the probabilities that his life too may be given, as so largely his predecessors have been, to the work of this one church.

The members are scattered up and down among the giant hills. They gather on the Sabbath. They gather for the hour of prayer. They are gathered at last to their fathers and sleep their last sleep close under the shadow of the church the loved: not far indeed from the resting-place of the pastors whom they have listened to with respect and labored with in affection.

It is a pleasant picture, this reproduction of past days. It is a useful town—a strong church, and nearly the ideal of old New England days as can perhaps be found either among the mountains or beside the seas. Even the stranger who comes among us feels its power. His walks upon the village green will tell him of the quiet strength which gives New England its power.—His walks among the graves of the dead are a reminder of his own duty and of the days gone by as contrasted with the days present. The new white shaft will tell that the life of some Madge or Dora or Maud has gone.—The weather-beaten stone, with its rude urn or weeping willow or angel's face carved on its strong substance will tell some Mehitable has left the earth, or some Patience or Hepzibah or Almeda has departed.

Just over their a whole family record will be inscribed, chiefest glory of which will seem to be that Peter was the husband of two wives, by whom he had ten children, whose names are recorded on their father's stones and just beyond the thoughtless traveller will read the lesson solemnly discoursed to him as if from the lips of one a century sleeping beneath:

"Come, my dear friends, look on my grave,
Such a lodging you must have."

How could they be other than calm, reverent and sedate with such words sounding from the tombs of the dead? How can they be else than patient, hopeful and steadfast in the faith when for so many years the gospel ministry has done its grand, good work without the changes which belong to these latter days.

Bright, peaceful, pleasant pictures of a New England day, it comes to me as I take up my work in my Western home. It rests me even now to think of that quiet Sabbath, that old church under the shadow of the everlasting hills, and itself shadowing the graves of the dead.

In the work needed in the West, in the building, planting and training, more than ever do I thank God for the Church of New England, her faith and her life.—New York Observer.

A CLOWN'S TRICK.—Malcomb, the celebrated English clown, who has been engaged, by cable, by Managers Moulton & Johnson, to travel with their Mammoth Minstrel and Pantomime Company, is a man of remarkable courage, coolness and ready wit. During one of his professional tours in Russia he got into a terrible scrape, from which however, his presence of mind enabled him to extricate himself triumphantly. He had been engaged, while at St. Petersburg, to perform at a private entertainment given by a wealthy nobleman resident in the Basil Island. It was in the depth of winter, and the Neva was frozen hard. Malcomb dressed himself in his clown's costume at his lodging, wrapped himself up in furs, hired a sledge and started for his destination, instructing his driver to take the short cut across the river. Probably tempted by Malcomb's costly pelisse, the istvostchik, a tall, powerful fellow, pulled up suddenly when about half way across, jumped down from his perch, and letting fall the reins, turned toward his fare with menacing gestures. A moment's hesitation would in all likelihood have cost Malcomb his life; but he proved equal to the emergency. Throwing off his furs, and revealing himself to his would be assailant, in the motly garb of his profession, he sprang out of the sledge and proceeded to execute some of his most amazing gambols on the ice. Paralyzed with terror by so terrific an apparition, the istvostchik made one ineffectual attempt to cross himself, staggered forward, and with an agonized cry of "The fiend himself!" fell flat and motionless upon his face. Without further loss of time Malcomb slipped on his furs, picked up the reins, jumped into the sledge, and drove off, safe and sound, to fulfil his engagement. Next morning the istvostchik's corpse was found, stiff and stark, lying face downward on the frozen breast of the Neva.

Massachusetts has the credit of having the largest shoe manufacturing interest of any State in the Union, and it is due chiefly to her enterprise that America is conceded to have attained the highest perfection in the art of shoe-making of any country in the world. Perhaps few are aware that the shoe and leather interest in the United States is next in importance and value to the Agricultural, largely exceeding that of iron, coal, wooden or even cotton. The annual sales of shoes and leather amount up to something like $250,000,000. Most of this trade is centered in the Eastern States, but the manufacture of shoes is growing largely in the West, and had it not been that Massachusetts had about three-fourths of the trade, she might have lost her prestige several years ago, having been almost distanced by the industries of the enterprising Western States in the commercial race.—Cleveland Leader.

SECTION 2 OF THE TOWN BY-LAWS.—Three or more persons shall not stand near each other upon any sidewalk or street crossing, so as to obstruct a free passage for foot passengers; and any person or persons obstructing any sidewalk or street crossing shall move on immediately after a request made by one of the Selectmen, the Chief of Police, or any constable or police officer; and any person neglecting or refusing to move when so requested, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than one dollar, nor more than ten dollars, for each offence.

It is not a long time ago that the PRESS felt called upon to express its opinion upon the manner in which this section of the By Laws quoted above was enforced. The police seem to think that if they request a group of loafers to "move on," that is all that is required of them. But that is not all. There are lots of good people who thoughtlessly obstruct the walks by standing in groups and talking, much to the inconvenience of others who are about their business. These same persons would perhaps grumble if the police made the request of them, — still there is the law, and why shouldn't it be enforced? We all have personal rights, and these rights can be exercised, only so far as they do not infringe upon the rights of others. The exercise of this law in a judicious manner by the police is what should be expected by every citizen, as the By-Law gives the police ample authority to compel a person standing on the sidewalk to move on. Supposing this section was not enforced at all the result would be that the rights of a large number of people would be continually infringed by a few selfish or thoughtless persons, who care nothing for the convenience of others. How often do we see a group of business men gathered in the middle of the walk on Main street or in front of the Post office engaged in conversation, thus compelling other people to make their way around them as best they can, and as often at a great inconvenience, especially ladies. The streets are designed for travel and no other purpose, and the object of the by-law is to facilitate their use by the general public, and we claim no individual has a right to use them for the transaction of private business, except so far as moving about is his private business. He may walk upon the sidewalk, but he may not stand still, particularly when his doing so is an interference with the free passage of others. We have noticed those persons, who, when they see the police coming, will stand in a long line upon the curbstone, facing inward, and claim that they are not obstructing the sidewalk, because they are upon the edge of it. Isn't the edge of the sidewalk as much a part of it as the middle; and don't the public have the same right to walk upon it? Those people who stand upon the edge of it obstruct it even more, if possible, than those who stand in groups, and are therefore violating the law. This latter class are even more of an annoyance than any other; because no respectable woman likes to run the gauntlet of a long row of men and boys, and a larger part of them loafers and rowdies. How often we hear ladies complain of this nuisance, of these loafers spitting upon the walk, of their indecent language and insulting remarks. The law on this point has been very mildly enforced, too mildly we believe, inasmuch as a good deal of street loafing is permitted that should be summarily stopped. No person who has any self respect, will loaf about the streets at any time or make himself disagreeable to passers by. On the streets as in our business we should do as we would be done by, and we should be very careful not to obstruct or annoy others in the same pursuits.

WE ARE disposed to regard in a favorable manner the choice which the Republican State Central Committee have made in the chairman of the Convention, and of the Committee on resolutions. It is necessary that these officers should be selected in advance. The work of the Convention is ordinarily begun and finished in a day. And we think the party is satisfied with the selection that has been made.

Not so the Boston Globe. It is particular to advise its readers that "blue blood" is in the ascendency. That the common people are to have no share in the council of the Republican chiefs. This is arrant nonsense. And it is a scheme to influence many, who voted for Butler last fall, but who are disposed to vote the Republican ticket this fall. Many of these are men in the ordinary walks of life, who hate caste, and with whom these insinuations of the Globe are expected to have due weight.

The fact is, the Republican party is more of a friend to the laboring people than the opposite parties. Its views on the question of tariff have been pronounced and certain. To that protection which the party has been committed is due the good wages which the laborer is receiving to-day. Free trade in this country means reduction of wages, if it means anything. This the democratic party see plainly, and therefore dare not advocate it openly, although known to favor it. The course of the Republican party on this issue is straightforward—that of the democrats uncertain and vacillating.

The opponents of Butler this fall need not be deceived by any cry of "blue blood." There is to be no clique rule, no advance nomination of their standard bearer. All who are not satisfied with the course of the present state administration are to have equal voice and share with them in the coming campaign. The direct question of state administration for the past year is to be met, and the Republican party is ready to meet it, and to compare it with any of the previous administrations under their control. Several times during the life of Massachusetts have different causes brought about the election of democratic governors. But the folly has only lasted a single year. The dose has not been repeated. We believe history will repeat itself in the present instance.

Senator Hoar was selected as Chairman of Committee on Resolutions, mainly because of his known familiarity with the question of tariff. This will be an important issue to be met in the coming elections, at all events in 1884. He is better qualified than any other man, probably, in the State, for the position assigned him by the State Committee. It is a wise selection under the circumstances, and we believe subsequent events will confirm this judgment.

APROPOS OF the temperance work in this state, it may interest our readers to know that a vigorous and determined raid is being made in the city of New Bedford on the saloons. This city was one of the few which voted at the last municipal election to grant no licenses for the sale of liquors. The present Mayor was elected in the interests of temperance, but despite that fact, and the other, that the city voted "No" on the question of licenses, the saloons have been in the full tide of prosperity. It is claimed by some that Mayor Wilson, after his election, went back on the temperance people. That he was interviewed during the campaign and was understood to say that his only fear was that if elected he should be found too vigorous in the enforcement of the law. But that since his election he has done nothing at all in this direction.

Be that as it may, liquor was sold freely in that city. A prominent lawyer there, E. L. Barney, has maintained that the law could be enforced.—With a view of testing the matter, he accepted a retainer from the temperance people and agreed to close up every saloon within thirty days. Present indications do not point strongly to its accomplishment, but he has succeeded in a measure. His first move was on the saloons. Nearly every shop in the city has been raided, and what liquor could be found has been seized. This is continued every day. They do not have spasmodic attempts at enforcing the law, followed by a calm of several weeks. The visits of the police, aided by Mr. Barney, have been continuous. The saloon keepers have been brought before the courts and, in many cases, convicted. Mr. Barney is not a temperance man. He does not pretend to be such. He claims that it is with him a matter of business only. He has been employed, in his capacity as an attorney, to close up the saloons and prosecute the proprietors, and he purposes, as a faithful representative of his clients, to do it. He has not only raided the saloons, but has brought suits against the owners of the buildings where the saloons are, claiming that it is unlawful for the owners to let the buildings for illegal purposes. One of these men against whom he has proceeded has been considered a strong temperance man, and how this procedure will be regarded by the faithful remains to be seen.

There is no denying the fact that the liquor sellers are troubled. Liquor can be had—but it is sold secretly by some, and others have closed up entirely.—The open bar at the Parker House, the leading hotel of the city, as well as that of the Mansion House, has been closed. And if the guests of the house are able to obtain any, it is a matter beyond the cognizance of the public. We doubt if as much liquor is sold as before the raid began. The man who is determined to have it at all events will succeed in New Bedford. But those who only drink when constantly exposed to the temptation, will be likely to refrain from it. It is on these people, whose habit of drinking has not become confirmed, that the effect will be the most lasting and beneficial. These people will not skulk around back yards, and travel half a mile to obtain a glass of liquor. While they are not total abstainers, they only indulge when there are open saloons in close proximity to their travels. Remove this temptation, and while they may drink occasionally, they will do so less often, and the sales of the liquor sellers be perceptibly diminished. In this way the raid has been a success. Any curtailment of the liquor traffic, reducing the money spent for its consumption, is of value to a community.

THE DEMOCRATIC party in this vicinity will of course be under deep obligations to Editor Litchman, for the advice which he gratuitously gives them in the Statesman of the 8th inst. Editor Litchman represents the Greenback-Labor party in the State, and since his appointment by Gen. Butler to an important office, we presume he speaks by authority of the Governor. The substance of the advice is "follow the lead of our party and all will be well. Nominate the men we select, and we will help elect them. Refuse, and ——"

Seriously, this attempt of the greenback party to make the democrats a tail to their political kite, is amusing. It is a farce to lookers on outside of Essex County. In the city of New Bedford, with a population of about 28,000, a printed greenback vote was never cast. And that, too, with the large labor element in this manufacturing city. But here in Essex County their strength is so much larger than a cipher, that they are emboldened to think they can control the whole state.

The democrats, of course, enjoy the situation. To feel that in Essex County, at least, they must not make a move without consulting Editor Litchman; that Butler is under such obligations to Litchman, that the democrats in offending him offend Butler, also—this must be interesting. Great is Editor Litchman! Great is the democratic party!

THE CONFLAGRATION at Vineyard Haven, Saturday evening, was very disastrous in its results, destroying nearly all of the little town. There was no fire department in town, and all efforts to extinguish the flames had to be put forth by the use of buckets and the ordinary fire extinguisher. Had it not been for the aid which was given by the citizens of Cottage City, and the officers and crew of the Martha's Vineyard, one of the Oak Bluffs Steamers, much greater loss would have ensued.

The total loss is given at $190,000 and the insurance at $64,202. But the greatest calamity comes upon those who have lost the houses which were theirs and their ancestors, and which with the effects comprised all of their earthly possessions. There is no business of any account in the town, and it is probable that only a few of the houses will be rebuilt. In the summer time there are quite a number of boarders in the town, but in other seasons of the year there is a quiet resting over the town with which nothing in this vicinity can compare. Contributions have been solicited in Cottage City and vicinity, for the relief of the sufferers, many of whom are in need of both food and clothing.

IT IS TO be regretted that the parade of the fire department must be given up for lack of funds. And it is the more to be regretted that the town did not appropriate a reasonable sum for such a parade. One ought to be held each year. The department should once in a year come together in a body, that citizens may see what an able body of men they are. It is for the interest of this town—for any town, to maintain a good department. To do so, the men should be interested in the work. Upon them, in a large measure, is the safety of our property dependent. That they rally promptly, that they spare no efforts to save property from destruction, is to their credit, and to that of the town as well. She can well afford the petty sum of a few hundred dollars, to be expended in this manner. We believe it would be well spent.

Frank Cousins advertises special bargains in each department of his store during the month of August, to reduce stock preparatory to opening new Fall Goods.

THE DEATH of George Marston, ex attorney-general of Mass., is announced. Mr. Marston had been confined to his house for a number of weeks, but it was supposed he was convalescent, having sat at the family board but a few days ago.

Until his nomination by the Republicans as Attorney General in 1879, he was little known outside of the Cape. He was a graduate of Harvard Law School with President Hayes, and was admitted to the bar in 1845. He was district attorney for the southern district for nineteen years, besides holding other offices in Bristol county. In 1869 he became law partner of Hon. Wm. W. Crapo, and together they easily controlled the important business of New Bedford and vicinity. On the election of Mr. Crapo to Congress he relinquished his practice to Mr. Marston. He began life as a whig but at the time of the war he became a sturdy republican. He was a warm friend of Mr. Crapo, and was known last year as the strongest advocate for his nomination as Governor of this state.

Fifteen thousand citizens crowd a hall to see Sullivan pound Slade, as many more push and trample each other for the honor of drinking at his bar; not one boy in Essex County was found to compete for a hundred dollars as a prize for scholarship. — Litchman's Statesman. Probably ninety-nine men in every hundred of those present at Sullivan's bar room intend to vote for Butler next November, and he is their choice for President of the United States. As the Cambridge Press says: "In view of this fact can it be doubted that Butler is a great 'reformer' and that the 'reform' party knows its leader?"

An Essex county gentleman, on our presenting him by mail, with a bill for the renewal of his subscription to the Telegraph & Pioneer, writes us follows: "We are in receipt of bill for your paper, one year in advance; will you kindly stop at expiration of subscription. We fully appreciate your excellent paper, but having all papers in our own county free we must stop all outside."—Telegraph.

The above was taken from the Chelsea Telegraph & Pioneer. Will the editor please inform us of the name of the gentleman; and if he receives all papers in this county free, there will be one that he will not receive in the future. Pass this round.

MAP OF SALEM.—The large and handsome map of Salem, Beverly, Danvers, Marblehead and Peabody, recently issued with the Naumkeag Directory, has been put in covers in suitable form for the pocket, and will be found very valuable and convenient for the use of pleasure riders and others. It has also been mounted on rollers in handsome form. Copies can be procured at the regular bookstores and at the Salem Observer office. Map on rollers $2. Pocket edition $1.

Candidates for admission to the State Agricultural college do not seem to be at all numerous. State Senator Sparhawk advertised extensively the fact that an examination would be held at Salem on Thursday, but no one appeared.—Lynn Bee.

The Bee is a little too previous. Senator Sparhawk's examination of candidates for the State Scholarship at Amherst has not taken place.

W. B. Gifford & Co., 77 and 79 Market street, Lynn, have marked down their entire stock to prices that must sell them before taking in Fall Goods. They have also added many special attractions in the way of bargains. Also bargains on their remnant counter.

The Democrats of Massachusetts are to have a talking Campaign this fall. Judge Abbott, Woodbury, Thompson and all the other silk-stockinged leaders are to help Butler out, and it is said that Ex-Collector Simmons has promised to make a stumping tour for him as an "Independent Republican."

A New York gentleman visiting in town had a fish dinner at the Lafayette House, Salem, recently, and speaks in the highest terms of the house and its appointments, especially of the dinner, which he said was a "luxury for an epicure."

Mr. Wm. Redmond, leading man, and Mrs. Thomas Barry, leading lady, at the Boston Theatre, start soon on their New England tour in Osborne's new play, "A Midnight Marriage," opening at New Bedford, Aug. 30.

The Iron Steamboat Co.'s excursions to Portsmouth are growing in popularity. The new steamer Taurus is stanch, speedy and handsome, and is handled by men of experience. Excellent music is provided.

THOSE WHO USE IT, SAY
I have carefully examined the People's Cyclopedia, and am heartily ready to endorse the same as a work of great value. I am the owner of the Encyclopedia Britannica, and yet do not hesitate to say that the People's Cyclopedia, in many features, is superior, while the cost is far less. I know of no Cyclopedia so fully in the reach of all classes and yet so wonderfully adapted to their needs. W. P. CHIPMAN, Pastor of the Baptist Church, Peabody, Mass.
I have examined the People's Cyclopedia and consider it worthy the attention of any one desiring an excellent book of reference. The very moderate cost of the work is especially to be noted. G. FRED OSGOOD,
The People's Cyclopedia, sold by Mr. A. E. Cady, agent, I regard a work of rare merit. Its range of subjects and comprehensive of treatment is all that can be desired. It fills a place no other Cyclopedia has done. Its completeness at so small a cost is a very strong recommendation which cannot fail to be appreciated. CHAS. W. SMITH, Pastor of Washington St., M. E. Church, Peabody, Mass.
Before examining The People's Cyclopedia, I could not conceive how so good a work could be made. I can not now imagine how a better one can be made. S. W. MASON, LL. D., Supervisor Schools, Boston.
I deem it an admirable work. It covers the field of knowledge effectively, and gives just that information which all want. In short, it is just the book for reading, thinking Americans. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Brooklyn.
When I had finished a careful examination of The People's Cyclopedia, I decided to purchase it, although I already possessed the Britannica, American and Johnson's Universal. Each of these great works has merits peculiarly its own, but it may, in my judgment, be truly said of The People's, that it furnishes more information for the money than any work extant. Col. JOHN D. WASHBURN, Worcester, Mass.
I am especially pleased with its freshness and accuracy, its brevity and clearness of statement, and at the same time its fulness and completeness, making it, in my opinion, the most convenient and usable of all Cyclopedias before the public. N. A. LUCE, State Supt. of Schools, Maine.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The 4th Mass. Heavy Artillery held a reunion at the Willows to-day, and after a dinner at the Pavilion, of which they spoke in high praise, visited the museum and other places of interest, took barges and came to Peabody, where an inspection of the Institute was made. They got at the monument and forming a line around it, uncovered and saluted. A visit was made to the new Town House, which excited expressions of admiration. After their return to Salem, they inspected, at the old court house, the witch records and curiosities, and then dismissed. They were accompanied by several ladies, and came from various places, including Boston, Hudson and Quincy.

About two weeks ago, while in pasture at No. Andover, two pairs of steers were stolen. Their absence was not noticed for several days, until the farmers visited the pasture where they were placed. Officers were notified, and an investigation followed, which led to the discovery of the hides of the stolen animals at J. B. Thomas'. The horns have been proven to belong to the missing steers by several marks upon them, and a detective is working up the case. It appears that a Lynn party, who was stopping in No. Andover, stole the animals and drove them to Lynn, where he sold them to a butcher by the name of Heal, who sent them to Peabody to be killed.

A meeting of the committee of arrangements for the annual parade of the Grand Army posts of Essex county was held in the Grand Army Hall at Salem last Wednesday afternoon. It was voted to hold the annual parade at Marblehead on Wednesday, September 12. The following officers were chosen: Division commander, Comrade Benjamin Pitman of Post 82, Marblehead; commander of first brigade, Charles Howes of Post 152, Essex; second brigade, Col. C. T. Batchelder of Post 50, Peabody. Invitations will be extended to the governor and staff, the department commander and staff, Secretary of State Pierce, all past department commanders and the selectmen of Marblehead.

An industrious workingman told us a sad story last week of the evils of rum. His wife is unfortunately addicted to the excessive use of liquor, and has several times been arrested and placed in penal institutions. For some time his wife has been so continually under the influence of liquor that she has neglected her household. The woman having spent all the money she could raise, and being denied more, has been buying liquor and having it charged to her husband. As soon as he would order one saloon keeper not to trust her on his account she would go to another, and in that way has run him in debt.

Miss Nellie E. Boyle, leading soprano of St. James' Church choir at Salem, and well-known in Peabody, having sung on several occasions and lately at the concert of war songs by the Grand Army, was married on Monday of last week at the residence of the Rev. Father Gray, to Mr. Michael J. Brady, of Allentown, Pa. After a reception in the afternoon, at the residence of the bride's father, the pair started for Allentown. The wedding gifts were elegant and valuable. Miss Boyle possesses a fine voice and has attained prominence as a singer. Her departure will be felt in the choir of which she was a member.

The Salem and Peabody Water Board have had a conference upon the question of connecting the Peabody high service with the Salem mains, for use in emergency. There has been a connection with the low service, which is practically useless, since the high service was put in. Salem wanted to divide the expense for the necessary connection and repair of pipe, should there be any, but after being convinced that they were to receive the whole advantage, they decided to make the connections, having received the permission of the Peabody Water Board.

Clearing up around the new Town Hall is progressing. Stakes have been driven around the hall near the sidewalks, and to these stakes grading will be done from the foundations of the building. Edge stones will be set and a nice walk laid. A curved path will be laid out to the front entrance. The grade of the streets will be made to correspond, hitching posts will be erected in the rear, and everything for the convenience of the public. All this will come within the amount appropriated by the town.

The Lowell Courier recommends that if a modest, subdued and seedy man rings your door bell, and holding a letter in his hand, begs of you three cents to pay the postage on it, as he is too poor to send word to his mother-in-law of the death of his wife, don't you give him the money. This is his way of getting a living.

FIRE DEPARTMENT NOTES.

The Board of Engineers, at their meeting last Wednesday evening, voted to buy 1000 feet of the Boston Woven Hose Co.'s. fire hose for the use of this department. This is the first of this hose that has ever been owned by this town.

Different parties have figured on the rebuilding of the old Eagle hose carriage. We understand that a new carriage has been ordered, to be after the style of the horse hose carriage, and to be run by hand, but fitted to be run with a horse if required.

The piece of suction hose, burst at the Osborne fire, has been repaired and was tested Friday evening by Steamer 1, at the hydrant on Walnut street, and found all right.

The contract for coal for the brick house, was awarded to Wm. Pickering, Jr., & Co., of Salem, and the coal delivered.

Hose 1 have just received a new rubber flexible play pipe.

Richard Keefe, of H. & L. 1, was severely burned about the face and hands, while trying to save one of the horses at the Osborne fire.

The committee on parade of the Fire Department held a meeting Thursday evening, and voted to indefinitely postpone the matter, owing to a lack of interest, and subscriptions by the citizens. The firemen did not feel like having a large assessment themselves and so the matter was dropped.

The account of the Osborne fire in the "Reporter," has caused no little indignation among the firemen of this town. It was full of mis-statements from beginning to end. It gives the department no credit for what it did, and sneers at the papers that were willing to give praise where it belongs. The Reporter gives the whole credit to the hose carriages, and says that the steamers did no service worth mentioning. Hose 1 got on the first water, with only a few seconds between them and Steamer 1, who worked fully five minutes before bursting their hose, and in that time did much toward stopping the fire. Steamer 2 was on the ground before Steamer 1 broke down, and soon had two streams on the fire, not on the ruins, as the Reporter would have it understood. Steamer 1 did not "become entirely useless" as they had another piece of suction with them, and could have made the change in short order, if Steamer 2 had not been ordered to work. That the steamers did valuable service is acknowledged by all fair-minded men. It is very evident that fifteen men is a small crew for the truck, but the men present at the fire worked as well and did as good service, as the company ever did when they had twenty-five men. Foreman Miller is the right man in the right place. The "fulsome praise of our contemporary" is highly appreciated by the firemen, "who are an intelligent class of men," and are "capable of distinguishing between malice and truth."

The "boys" that had to stay by the ruins until after three o'clock were rather disappointed at not receiving a collation, as they were both wet and hungry. Some of the companies went to Bragdon's and bought their own collations.

Assistant Foreman Brophy, of Hose 2, Albert Carleton, of the H. & L., and Fireman Flynn, of Steamer 2, are in camp at Framingham this week.

Hose 2 was ordered out last Saturday evening to try the hydrants on Mt. Vernon and Tremont streets.

Below we give the names of the men comprising the department. There have been a few changes in the commanding officers since last year. The changes being, Foremen Cummings of Steamer 2, Miller, of H. & L. 1, and Mallard of Hose 1.

Chief Littlefield is now on his fortieth year in the department of this town, and is the oldest fireman now in service.

Frank A. Wilkinson of Hose 3, has been in the department since 1874, and has never been fined in all that time. That is a pretty clean record.

The Trustees of the Firemen's Relief Association, met last evening, but not having a quorum, they adjourned until Tuesday evening, Aug. 21.

Abel Proctor H. & L., held a special meeting last evening, and perfected their arrangements for the Portsmouth muster. They voted to take two drums for music.

So. PEABODY. — Last Wednesday evening a carriage collided with the six o'clock car to Peabody on the Lynn road. John H. B. Grover had stopped at the drinking fountain, and upon turning away his carriage collided with the car, breaking one of the hind wheels and damaging the top. Spectators of the affair assert that the fault was with Mr. Grover; that he undertook to cross the track in front of the car when it was in motion.

He was conveyed to his home and Dr. Osborne was called and set the broken bone.

TIRED ALL OVER.

WHAT RESTED AND REFRESHED A WEARY MAN IN MEMPHIS.

"No, it never amounted to an acute pain, but continued to be a dull weary ache in the small of my back," writes Mr. Jas. Thomas, of No. 59 Madison street, Memphis, Tenn. "This was an old experience, and life became dull music. I was tired all over, with pain in the lower limbs, and a habit of lying awake nights. Recently I tried one of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS and was decidedly relieved within twenty-four hours. It may have been Providence that did the work, but I give the credit to Benson's porous plaster." Mr. Thomas' reverential idea does him credit, but Providence works by agents, and among them Benson's plaster ranks first as an external remedy. It acts quickly in relief and healing, and renders life better worth living. Price 25 cents. Look in the middle of the plaster for the word CAPCINE. Ask your physician about it. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Miscellaneous.

A TRAVELING "HOG'S" BAGGAGE. One day last week an incident occurred on the Eastern railroad, between Boston and Lynn, which deserved record. A very well known citizen of this city running from Boston, found the cars occupied by a passenger, but utilized by one to hold a valise. Our fellow-citizen, whom we will call Mr. B., quietly lifted the baggage from the cushion with a view to setting it on the floor and filling the seat himself.—"What are you doing there?" sharply exclaimed the occupant of the inner seat; "that belongs to a friend of mine." "Never mind your friend," calmly replied Mr. B., "I will take care of him when he comes." Both parties "ceased firing" at this point, and the train moved on to Somerville, but no "friend" claimed the valise and seat, and Mr. B. reminded his fellow traveler of that fact, who said, "Well, that gentleman will be here soon,"—but as Everett and Chelsea were passed and there was no change in the situation, Mr. B. concluded to make a movement. He accordingly left his seat, and, walking to the rear of the car, said to the conductor, "there's a suspicious character in this car. A gentleman has left a valise in that seat, and I believe that man means to steal it, and I want you to stop him." The conductor replied, "Yes, I've seen that class of gentry before, and I'll attend to his case;" whereupon Mr. B. returned to his seat. As the train slowed up at Oak Island the traveller gave signs of preparing to leave the car, observing which, the conductor approached. As was expected, the traveler grasped the valise; but the conductor interposed, ordering him to drop it.—He indignantly refused, saying, "It is mine!" But Mr. B. here said, "You are a liar, sir! you told me that it belonged to a 'gentleman' who was to occupy a seat." The traveler retained the valise, and attempted to go, but the conductor sternly said, "If you don't leave that I'll arrest you! I will take it to headquarters in Boston, where you can have it by proving property." The Oak Islander, beaten at all points, was obliged to surrender on the terms offered, and left the train—a specimen of a baffled and disgusted hog (that's the word). It is perhaps needless to thank our friend Mr. B., in behalf of decent travelers everywhere, for his skillful and courageous disposal of a typical railroad nuisance.—Lynn Transcript.

A rather sad affair took place in one of our streets the other day. A young lady with her arms full of bundles hurried from a dry goods store, when one of them fell on the sidewalk without her noticing it. Just behind her was a polite young man, who quickly stepped foward to pick it up. Now a bundle done up in a piece of paper, with a dry goods advertisement on it is apparently as harmless as a mother's spanking, and there it lay on the sidewalk as guileless as a worm after a rain. Just as he stooped to pick it up, there was a rustling of the paper, the twist began to come out of the ends, and in another instant a bright red thing, a sort of a cross between a bee-line and a devil-fish, flew into the air before his eyes and a number ten, 36 inch, double-jointed, duplexl eliptical, steelbolt, bustle attachment, dollar and a half, red-headed hoop-skirt waltzed around, gyrated, opened, shut up and fell on the walk as flat and thin as a restaurant pie. The young man straightened himself up, looking as if he wished the tail of a comet would sweep him from this fair land, and the young lady came back with a face that resembled the sunset on a fifty cent chromo, and picked up the war contrivance; then she went toward the east and he went toward the west, and the sun ducked his head behind a cloud to hide a smile and three or four looked on and laughed and doubled themselves up, and were left trying to hang their heads for shame.—Milford Gazette.

Two editors met at Saratoga last summer.

One said, "Hullo, James, how long you here for?"

The other replied, "Oh, as long as my money holds out."

"So, indeed, I'm sorry, I was in hopes you'd stay all night."

There's a pretty girl in Covington who becomes deathly sick if she eats ice cream, and the number of summer beaux that girl has is something awful to contemplate.

Opinion of Dr. Mott, late Government Chemist, on Allcock's Porous Plaster.

My investigation of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER shows it to contain valuable and essential ingredients not found in any other plaster. These ingredients are so perfectly proportioned that the Allcock's Porous Plaster will not cause blisters or excessive irritation, and I find it superior to and more efficient than any other plaster. HENRY A. MOTT, Jr., Ph.D., F.C.S., Prof. of Chemistry, N. Y. Medical College, etc. No. 61 Broadway, New York, May 23, 1883. aug 8—4t

THAT DOUGHTY DUCHESS.

OPPOSITE OPINIONS ABOUT A WONDERFUL WOMAN—HER THUMB AND FINGERS.

"Crack nuts with her fingers? Why, you can't mean it!" cried a young lady graduate of the Normal College, in the utmost astonishment.

"But I do mean it," affirmed her big brother, who had taken several prizes in athletics, "and I re-assert it: that Cymburga, wife of Duke Ernest, of Austria, could crack nuts with her fingers and drive nails into the wall with her thumb."

"What a monstrous woman!" said the young lady. "What a useful woman," amended her big brother.

The Austrian Duchess was mighty because she kept good hours, good habits and perfect digestion.

Mrs. Alice Strong, of Pittsburg, Pa., writes a different story about herself, but deserves praise for her frankness. She says: "For the past three years I have been subject to severe attacks of colic and cramps, and exhausting attacks of Diarrhœa. Weary of experimenting with medicines, I turned, without hope, to PARKER'S GINGER TONIC. Three bottles cured me entirely. I have tried it also for other ailments with which women are often afflicted, and it far surpassed my expectations. I am happy to offer this testimony for the benefit of other women."

Ladies who are interested in Mrs Strong's letter, will please remark that PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of ginger. It cures colic easily, but by virtue of other rare and powerful ingredients, it also masters all diseases of the Blood—such, for example, as Rheumatism, Consumption, Scrotula, and all disorders of the Kidneys, Liver and Stomach. It is a vitalizer and stimulant, but not an intoxicant. Prices, 50 cents and $1 per bottle. Hiscox & Co., Chemists, New York.

Little Jack's aunt had not been quite pleasant towards him for a day or two because he was very noisy. At tea last night he said all at once: "I wish we lived in England." "Well, what put that in your head?" inquired his father with curiosity. "Because if you lived in England you couldn't marry Aunt Fanny when mother dies." Great astonishment of the family at the precocity of the child.

HAY FEVER.—From Col. J. Maidhof, of New York: "I have suffered severely for the last ten years from Hay Fever in early and mid-summer and in the fall. I desire in the interest of my fellow sufferers to testify in favor of Ely's Cream Balm. My short use of it demonstrated its efficacy. J. Maidhof, 401 Broadway.

I can recommend Ely's Cream Balm to relieve all persons suffering from Rose Cold and Hay Fever. I have been a great sufferer from these complaints and have used it. I have recommended it to many of my friends for Catarrh, and in all cases where they have used the Balm freely they have been cured. T. Kenney, Dry Goods Merchant, Ithaca, N. Y.

Fragments of a dialogue heard between two languid swells at the Union Club: "Fellah told me you were engaged." "Yaas!" "Jolly girl?" "Awful!" "So glad." "Yaas?" "Married soon?" "No! It's off now." "Bless me. Don't say so." "Yaas. Heard the family eat beans. Couldn't stand that!" "Too bad!" "Yaas!"

GIVEN AWAY.

We cannot help noticing the liberal offer made to all invalids and sufferers by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. You are requested to call at Spaulding's Drug Store, and get a Trial Bottle free of cost, if you are suffering with Consumption, Severe Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Loss of Voice, Hoarseness, or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. It will positively cure you.

A vigorous old fellow in Maine, who had buried his fourth wife, was accosted by an acquaintance, who, unaware of his bereavement, asked: "How is your wife, Cap'n Plowjogger?" To which the cap'n replied with a perfectly grave face: "Waal, to tell ye the trewth, I am kinder out of wives just naow."

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

A Western paper says: "Sam Weldon was shot last night in the rotunda by Harsy Parsons." About the worst place a man can be shot, next to the heart, is in the rotunda. It invariably proves fatal.

BOSTON BLOODS.—Mr. C. S. Hollis, Veterinary Surgeon, Boston, Mass., certifies that he has made the great pain-cure St. Jacobs Oil, the sole remedy in his practice for horse ailments, and considers it superior to any cure he has known in forty years. He tried the same great pain-banisher on himself for rheumatism and by which he was completely cured.

It has become the fashion for rich men to own steam pleasure yachts, but the poor man, as usual, has to content himself with schooners.

Damonia, the new remedy advertised in our columns, is a magnetic mineral earth lately discovered in Texas, which a careful analysis of our most prominent chemists declares to contain the most potent medical ingredients. A rial is recommended.

PLAIN WORDS

ARE BEST TO EXPRESS THE SUFFERING SO LONG ENDURED BY A MOST EXCELLENT LADY, MRS. G. FISHER, 29 CLARK ST, NEW HAVEN, CONN. HER KIND AND GRATEFUL EXPRESSION TOWARDS THE MEANS THAT AFFORDED RELIEF.

Facts clothed in plain words are best. Mrs. George Fisher lives in a pleasant cottage at 29 Clark St., New Haven, Conn. She says: "I was a terrible sufferer from Liver disease for a period of twelve years. My family physician told me that it was chronic inflammation of the Liver. I tried a great many remedies recommended for liver difficulties. I was under the physicians' care a great deal, but could get no relief, until I began taking Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. I experienced relief at once, and to-day I'm enjoying good health through the use of this. I had also been a great sufferer from rheumatism in my limbs and shoulders, but I have been cured entirely through the use of FAVORITE REMEDY. I consider Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY a most excellent medicine. I know of many in this city who have received great benefit from the use of FAVORITE REMEDY. It is, sir, a good medicine. I know it, for I've tried it."

Mrs. Fisher is a lady of character and means what she says.

Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your Liver disordered? Have you derangement of the Kidneys or Bladder associated with Constipation of the Bowels? If so, you want Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Dr. Kennedy practices medicine and surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. Address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Book Notices.

There are few readers who will not find something in the September No. of DEMORREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE to please them. The contents are agreeably diversified and the articles of an interesting nature. Many of the articles are fully illustrated, and the various departments leave nothing to wish for in the way of useful information. The frontispiece is a beautiful steel engraving from Millais' celebrated painting, "The Bride of Lammermoor," now in the Vanderbilt gallery of New York. For sale by the Peabody News Co.

The September number of FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE could scarcely be excelled in the variety and excellence of the contents,—it is overflowing with good things. Rev. C. E. Cheney, Bishop of the Diocese of Chicago, contributes No. VIII of "Religious Denominations in the United States—What is the Reformed Episcopal Church?" The editor has a charming article, "The Ministry of Tears;" "The American Pilgrim in Palestine." The serial, short stories, sketches, essays, etc., afford delightful and edifying reading. The number is profusely and beautifully embellished. Price 25 cents per number; $3 a year, postpaid. Address, Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

TO AGENTS.—Price of "Key to Boston Inside Out" to agents is 60 cents, 432 pages, gilt cover and back. Retail price, $1.50. Send registered letter or post-office order. No open accounts. No C. O. D. The original "Boston Inside Out" has reached its twenty-fifth edition, and never went more rapidly than now. One agent has sold 1500 within a few months; another agent has sold 500 in a still shorter time; 800 were sold in the city of Lynn alone. Price of "Boston Inside Out," to agents, 50 cents cash. Retail, $1.50; 550 pages, gilt cover, with steel portrait of the author. The "Key" is more acceptable to the Christian reader and the family, as there is not a prurient word in it, though the priesthood be handled without gloves. Address, Rev. HENRY MORGAN, 81 Shawmut Avenue, Boston, Mass.

"Father," he said, as the old gentleman looked up, "you are the president of a silver mining company, and can you tell me what an assessment is?"

"Yes, my son. We are just now sending out an assessment of twenty per cent. It means that every one owning shares in the company must pay twenty cents on every dollar."

"Oh, that's it? And now what's a dividend?"

"A dividend is the sharing of a profit with the stockholders. That is, when the officers of the company so far forget themselves as to have more cash on hand than they know what to do with it is divided up. There isn't much use in your remembering the word and its interpretation."

"But I must remember what assessment means?"

"Certainly—never forget that, for when assessments fail the country fails. One dividend of three per cent. excuses five assessments of ten per cent. Now run out to play."—Wall street.

WHAT HE HAD TO SAY.—Mr. Jenkins had an eye to the beautiful, and when his wife brought into the domestic economy a real pretty house girl, Mr. Jenkins began to scout around for game. Mrs. Jenkins had her eyes open, and one day caught her lord unsuccessfully trying to kiss the girl.

"Well, sir," she said, with frozen dignity and unutterable scorn, "I've caught you, have I?"

"The indications would warrant such a conclusion, my dear," he replied, coolly.

"What have you to say, sir?"

"Well, my dear, it isn't exactly in order for any lengthy remarks, but I should say if it was half as hard to kiss you as it was to kiss that girl, I really don't believe I could stand the racket oftener than once in ten years." Then he mopped his perspiring brow and took a long breath, and his wife sent the girl away and hired a colored woman.—Merchant Traveler.

It was a Jefferson avenue car, and it was nearly full of passengers when a lady got in attended by a small pet dog which at once excited the admiration and comment of all the ladies present.

"Is'nt he too awfully sweet?" said one.

"He's a perfect beauty," responded another.

"Carries himself as if the earth was not good enough for him," remarked a cynical old maid.

"What is his name, the cute little darling?" inquired an enthusiastic, caramel-munching girl.

"His name is Fannie," said the owner of the dog, picking it up.

There was silence in that street car for the space of half a minute.—Detroit Post.

Chief Faxon is "dead sure" that Butler will be beaten this year, and says Talbot is the man to do it. Faxon will be at the state convention with a temperance resolution in one pocket and a scalping knife in the other.—Milford Journal.

Humorous.

A hard case—The oyster's.

The key-note—"Wife, let me in."

Positive, wait; comparative, waiter; superlative, go and get it yourself.

"Love laughs at locksmiths." Reckon it's because they wear such big aprons.

"Little girl, where is your father?" "Poor papa died two years before I was born."

Can the policeman who chases and catches a Chinese criminal be said to be the Asiatic collarer?

There is a tide in the affairs of bank presidents which, taken at its flood, leads on to the penitentiary.

"Do you think that you will ever stop getting drunk?" asked the police judge of an Irishman. "Yes, sor." "When?" "Afther I'm dead, sor."

A sign in one of our stores reads "Bathing Suits." Sometimes it does and sometimes it doesn't. Shopkeepers should beware of generalities.

"Too much 'portance ken be laid ter de openness ob de eye," says Uncle Mose. "De owl is got a heap bigger eye den de fox, but he ain't got half as much sense."

An Indiana widow drinks nothing but black tea while she is in mourning. Such consistency is truly pathetic. But what a nerve she will have for her next husband.

Little Josie was accused by her sister of telling a falsehood. She at first denied, but afterward said by way of extenuation: "Well, suppose I did lie; everybody lies but God and George Washington."

When a young chap has engaged a girl three weeks ahead to go to a picnic, and learns only the day before that she has a boil on her nose and cannot see company, he feels as bad as the man who bets on the wrong horse.

A Vermont editor wants to know what gives color to pure water. We don't know what they generally use up in Vermont, but down this way it is generally something that is not legally sold except under license.

A Peruvian living in Milan has made a clock entirely out of bread. This reminds us of a Philadelphia blacksmith who made an anvil out of bread. The bread was presented to him by a Vassar college girl. She baked it herself.

Biggs is very practical. When a friend approached him the other day to sympathetically remark, "So you have buried your wife, Biggs?" Biggs replied quickly: "No, sir; thank heaven I'm not so poor as that! No, sir; I hired an undertaker."

"The human eye is capable of finding in nature about 1,100 distinguishable colors." No doubt of it. Some human eyes could probably find nearly that many distinguishable colors in a pair of fashionable hose. The human eye is a great searcher.

At a recent protracted meeting a colored sister, overcome by the powerful eloquence of the pastor to be converted, jumped up, and clapping her hands, loudly exclaimed: "Glory be to de Lawd, I'ze got 'ligion! I'ze converted! I'ze now a good Democrat!"

The touching line, "Our first in heaven" was gratuitously added to an obituary notice in a Philadelphia paper; and the father came into the office roaring mad—it was the third, and he wanted to know of the editor where he supposed the other two had gone.

The following placard hangs up in a Tennesee store window:

Summoned in haste.

Oh, doctor, wake up an d'ess 'ooself quick—
They's twins at our house and they's dreffal sick.
Poor 'ittle Johnnie played hookey from school,
And ate ten g'een apples; wan't he a fool?
I heard pa tell me he was all doubled up.
And he howls like Ponto, our 'ittle bull pup.
So, doctor, please come as quick as 'oo can,
And make Johnnie one again—that's a good man.

Young Mr. Brown was making an evening call when his best girl's little brother approached him and begged the loan of his whistle. "Whistle?" queried Mr. Brown. "I have no whistle." "Well, papa says you have," continued the little wingless angel, "and that you are all the time wetting it."

It is said that when Gov. Butler's son Paul entered Harvard College, the father handed a blank check to the boy, saying: "Everything I have is as much yours as mine; draw at your own discretion." The youth did not abuse this confidence. What a temptation it would have been for the old man.

Can a truly moral journal admit a circus advertisement into its columns? was a question which a Denver editor solemnly asked himself. The manager sent a free ticket to the editor's office, and, after witnessing the first performance, the latter wrote that "for children paying half price a sight of them trick mules was better than being brought up in a Sunday-school library."

HEAD OF CENTRAL.

Reports are current of serious differences which are said to have arisen between a newly married couple of Swampscott. The husband is said to be a young man of Salem, who is well known in this town as he was paying attention to a Peabody lady shortly before marrying the young lady in question. The young wife is reputed to have nearly $500,000 in her own name, and the husband is charged with abusing her in his attempts to secure possession of a portion of the property. At the time of the couple's marriage, a few months since, the bride's folks entered objections against the young man, but of no avail. She is alleged to have been recently severely assaulted by her liege lord at a summer hotel on the north shore, so that now a separation has occurred, he has gone no one knows where, and the courts have been asked to take some action regarding the husband and the money. At the time of the wedding, the union was said to be "for money," and recent events would seem to prove this. In course of time it became evident that a deep plot of swindling was the only cause of this unfortunate union, as after the fellow succeeded in gaining the confidence of the lady he soon endeavored to cause the transfer of property to the amount of $10,000 or thereabouts, to himself, after which his pretended affection seemed to subside.

The admirable picture of Mrs. Hattie (Townsend) Webster, that has been in Mr. Stetson's store window the past week, does great credit to the skill of A. B. Cross, of Salem, by whom it was made. The likeness is most perfect and the finish and shading excellent. Much gratification is expressed by the parents of the lady, that Mr. Cross has been able to produce so perfect a picture of their idolized daughter. The picture was made from a negative taken by Mr. Cross eight years ago, which had been carefully preserved at his studio, and without which this life-like picture could not have been made.—Danvers Mirror.

SAVED FROM DEATH.—A terrible accident was averted at the depot in Beverly, last Wednesday morning. A train bound east was in the depot, and proper signals had been given, when the Gloucester express shot round the curve headed for the train in the depot. The air brakes on the Gloucester train would not work, and a collision appeared to be inevitable, but a switchman named Williams, with great presence of mind, switched the wild train on to a side track when it was within fifty feet of the other, thus saving hundreds of lives. Williams was a former employe of the road, and saw the danger quick enough to avert it by shifting the switch. Such service should be substantially recognized.

Manager H. E. Reed, of the Willows Rink, has secured the lease of a portion of the Flint estate, Salem, and will erect a mammoth skating rink at the corner of Dodge and Washington street. The building will be of wood, 127 feet long on Dodge street by 95 feet front on Washington street. The skating floor will be of birch, 120 by 65, with space for 1,000 skaters, and there will be two balconies with seats for about 1,000 persons. There will be convenient ante-rooms on the Dodge street side, and it is suggested that for the purposes of campaign meetings the building will be admirably adapted, as the largest hall in the city. It will be completed by November.

PEABODY.

Rev. Albert Gould, who was pastor of the Methodist Church twelve years ago, was in town last evening, and was present at the regular Tuesday evening meeting. His old friends there were glad to meet him. He is pastor of the Methodist Church, Clinton.

The August meeting of the Essex Club was held in the Willows Pavilion last Saturday, where a dinner was served by landlord Davis to about thirty persons. Maj. Ben Perley Poore, Hon. Eben F. Stone and John B. Alley were among those present.

Mr. Thomas Skid, in the employ of Brown & Stanley, was severely injured by being thrown from a vicious horse last Monday. He was taken to the office of Dr. Foster where he received medical attendance and was afterward conveyed to his home in Wilson's coupe.

A young lady, who had been importuned to have her fortune told by one of the gypsy women traveling about town, asked her how she could tell fortunes any better than anyone else.—"Because I have got a gall on my liver," was the laconic reply. The point was not argued.

Letters and postal cards will be more likely to reach their destination if a little care is taken to have them properly addressed. Several postals have quite recently been dropped in the post-office here with no address whatever, and no name signed by which the sender could be ascertained.

One day last week, as a man employed in a tan yard was riding a harnessed horse on Foster street, the horse got his leg caught in the reins and stumbled, throwing his rider over his head, much to the amusement of a large number who were passing at the time. The man was not much hurt.

Mr. Thomas G. Stoddard, an old locomotive engineer, died at Quincy recently. At one time he was engineer on the Salem & Lowell road, and was well known to many here. For the past ten years or so he has been employed by the Old Colony. He was 61 years of age, and leaves a widow and four children.

Miss Grace G. Baldwin, daughter of Mr. Wm. H. Baldwin, celebrated her 12th birthday by giving a lawn party to her friends last Wednesday. All the afternoon and into the evening pleasant and merry sports were enjoyed.—Supper was served early in the evening and it was an agreeable affair.—Wakefield Citizen.

One of our Veterans went down to the Cadet Camp, last week, to look around. He said he thought the experience the young men received would be of great service to them in case of war. The tents of the officers were carpeted, and cot beds with two pillows, and mirrors were also very plenty. He thought the hardships were terrible.

It is rumored that there is a prospect of another vacancy in the Peabody High School—this time, the first assistant, Mrs. Underhill, who has received an offer of a more lucrative position. It is to be regretted that our town cannot afford to pay salary sufficient to secure the continued service of a good teacher in this school, when they get one.

Last Monday evening, as a carriage drawn by two horses belonging to Salem parties was driving down Lowell street, when near the "Kingdom" one of the horses fell, throwing the other down, and for a few minutes confusion reigned. The horses were soon assisted to their feet, but, with the exception of a broken harness, no damage was done.

We notice that the representatives of the different towns are presenting their public libraries with copies of the Tewksbury Investigation. We have not learned that our representative has yet presented the Peabody Library with a volume. We should think he would like to give it all the prominence he could, as he strongly supported Butler in the investigation.

As the train on the South Reading branch was approaching the square, on Monday evening last, a man very much intoxicated was seen lying across the timbers that span the brook, sound asleep, and very near the rails. After the train had passed he was aroused by some lookers-on, and he went on his way, probably not knowing the dangerous position in which he was found.

Last Wednesday evening, as Mr. George Bushby, driver for Samuel Donnell & Son, was going around the corner of Franklin and Chestnut streets with a wagon containing a quantity of groceries and three barrels of flour, the strap that held the flour on the wagon broke and the flour went rolling down the hill, while the other groceries settled back in the wagon. No serious damage was done.

A remarkable counterfeit $5 piece was lately stopped at the Boston Sub-Treasury. This coin bore the date of 1881, was the exact size and weight of the genuine, and contained fine gold equal in value to $4.63. The query comes as to the advantage of making counterfeits under severe penalties for a profit of 7 per cent., when an honest investment of requisite ability and capital would pay better.

Mr. Colin Chisholm has the contract for building the spire of St. Johns Catholic Church. After taking down some five feet of the present brick work, owing to its insecurity, and the adding of twelve feet more of brick work, the spire which will be of wood covered with tin will be put on. The tower will be 78 feet high with a gilded cross 17 feet high. The whole including the brick work will be 143 feet high.

There was a case of eviction on Mason street last night. A woman and her daughter, together with their goods and effects, were taken from the house and left on the sidewalk. There is a long story, with two sides to it, about the affair. The house belonged to one Dunney, who leased it to another party. Some of the neighbors got a team and carried the goods to a house on Boston street. Special officer, M. W. Cummings, was present to prevent violence or blood shed.

We would remind our lady readers, that the Art Rooms of J. G. Lowery, in Salem, next to the station of the horse railroad, are always open for their inspection, and Mr. Lowery is happy to see visitors whether they are purchasers or not. Mr. Lowery's asortment of frames, artist's materials and everything in his line is also full at all times, and at the most reasonable prices.

The Empire State continues to be the favorite excursion steamer in Boston Harbor. To-day she visits the Isles of Shoals; to-morrow and Sunday the North Shore; Friday, out to sea; Saturday, Bay Matinee at 2 P.M. Fare, 50 cents. There are also Moonlight Excursions every evening, Fare, 50 cents.

The travel to Oak Bluffs, Onset Bay and the resorts on the line of the Old Colony R. R., has been very large during the past week, and the accomodations furnished by that road first-class. This week the Baptists hold their camp meeting at the Vineyard.

Mr. Samuel C. Symonds, of the firm of S. C. & E. A. Symonds, dealers in crockery, died on Sunday, Aug. 5, at his residence on Winter street, Salem, aged 63 years. He was well known and respected.

FREE SCHOLARSHIP.

In accordance with the annexed resolve, approved June 2, 1883, in favor of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, at Amherst, whereby eighty free scholarships are established, said scholarships to be assigned equally to each Senatorial district, Senator William Sparhawk, of the Second Essex District, embracing town of Marblehead, city of Salem, towns of Peabody and Lynnfield, has invited William D. T. Trefry, Esq., of Marblehead, Prof. D. B. Hagar, of Salem, and Amos Merrill, Esq., of Peabody, to act as an examining board to test the qualifications of any one who may decide to enter into a competitive examination, in writing, for the mentioned gratuitous scholarships upon the following subjects: English grammar, geography, arithmetic, algebra, through simple equations, and the history of the United States.

The first term of the collegiate year opens Thursday, Sept. 13, 1883. Parties who wish to enter an examination for the above free scholarships will send name and address to Senator William Sparhawk, P. O. Box 207, Marblehead, Mass., who will inform them of the time and place of the examination.

The above presents a most excellent opportunity for two of the young men of the district to secure a sound practical education at a cost that has been reduced to a minimum. Tuition is free. Room rent $15.00 to $30 00 per year, according to location of room; board from $90.00 to $130.00 a year; total necessary expenses from $175 to $250 per year; one half of which the student can earn by his labor if he so desires.

Chapter 46 of the Acts and Resolves of the General Court for 1883 reads as follows: That annually for the term of four years eighty free scholarships be and hereby are established at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, the same to be given by appointment to persons in this Commonwealth after a competitive examination under the rules prescribed by the President of the College at such time and place as the Senator then in office from each district shall designate, and the said scholarships shall be assigned equally to each Senatorial district, but if there shall be less than two successful applicants for scholarships from any Senatorial district such scholarships may be distributed by the President of the College equally among the other Districts, as nearly as possible, but no applicant shall be entitled to a scholarship unless he shall pass an examination in accordance with the rules to be established as herein before provided.

The Sunbeam in the House.

I loved her when I saw her first,
'Twas in the days of June,
The roses then were all in bloom,
And all the birds in tune.
She, thinking that she was alone,
Let fall her braids of hair,
And stood with one white arm upraised,
To grasp a tree-bloom fair.
Then with a start toward me turned,
Whilst blushes dyed her face,
A vision sweet, a vision pure,
A vision full of grace!

I saw her in her father's house,
Its blessing and its light,
For there could be no clouds nor gloom,
Where shone that sunbeam bright.
And day by day still more and more,
I learned her worth to prize,
Until my last sweet crowning bliss,
I read in her dear eyes.
She is the sunbeam in my home,
The darling of my heart;
Till angels call her to the skies,
We twain no more shall part.

The City of Peace.

BY EBEN E. REXFORD.

I know the strangest city
That ever man has dwelt in,—
A white and peaceful city
Upon a sunny hill,
Where sweet wild flowers are blowing,
And winds are coming, going,
Among the green grass growing,
Along the streets so still.

The streets are long and narrow,
And the brown thrush and sparrow,
Their little nests have builded,
Deep in the flower-starred grass.
You will hear the song of linnet
And the robin's carol in it,
Whenever this strange city, I
Your footsteps chance to pass.

There are no sounds of sorrow,
No longings for to-morrow,
No pain to bear or borrow
Within its quiet streets;
But all is peaceful over
The green grass and the clover,
And rest all may discover,
Within its green retreats.

In this strange, hillside city,
This beautiful, still city,
No thought of pain or pity,
Disturbs the dweller's breast.
There, all earth's cares forgetting,
Beyond the world's regretting,
In peace that is unending,
The weary heart finds rest.

O, city wrapped in silence,
Like the Enchanted Islands,
How sweet the peace is, filling
The streets no mortals tread!
And just beyond is Heaven,
The happy hills of Heaven,
Upon whose border lieth;
This city of the dead.

Selected Story.

How Matilda Was Cured of Boasting.

BY THOMAS CORRY BATES.

If Matilda Spring's mother had not died when her little daughter was only four years old, she might not have become the vain and boastful little creature, that she undoubtedly did become as she grew older. Her father and aunts and older brothers felt so sorry for the little motherless thing, that they praised her more than was good for her, and would not say themselves, nor let anybody else say the sharp things to her that really should have been said.

Her unfortunate way of bragging of what she could do, and how "smart" she was, and what nice things she had, was continually getting Matilda into trouble, even before she received the final mortification, which virtually cured her of her infirmity.

For instance, when she was ten years old and had learned to play a few little waltzes and polkas on the piano, one of her friends named Esther Gwynne, gave a party. There were twenty or thirty little girls present, and after they had played at different games for a while, Esther proposed that they should try to have a little dance.

"I can't play much," said she, modestly, "but maybe you can get around a little to my tunes. I'll do the best I can."

But the "party" after trying to "hippity-hoppity" awhile to Esther's music, found that they couldn't make it go very well, and gave it up. Esther didn't know much about time, and every little while she forgot the note that came next, which, of course, was very bad for the dancing.

"I can play," remarked Matilda, proudly, "I've been taking lessons for nearly a year. I can play lots of things."

"Can you?" asked some of the girls, with an accent of surprise and unbelief.

They had learned to regard Matilda's assertions about herself and what she could do, with distrust.

"Oh, yes," replied Matilda, sitting down on the piano-stool with a great deal of manner, and spreading her dress out as she had seen players do at concerts. "I haven't taken lessons so long as Esther, but mercy! I can play the 'Sailor's Waltz' and the 'Emmeline Galop' and, oh! lots of things."

Matilda removed her bracelets amid the silence of the company, and with an air of great distinction began to play.

The little girls commenced to step to the music. Then there was a pause. Matilda had made a mistake and could not recover herself. She tried a new piece, and then another. But they all went in about the same way, and in spite of the "blowing of trumpets" with which she had heralded her performance, it ended in flat failure. She got up at last amid the tittering of the girls, and flounced up-stairs into the dressing-room. She "knew" that the reason why she had done so poorly was because she "had not had her notes," so comforting herself with this knowledge, she went down stairs, after having sulked a little while. The girls were playing "Authors" by this time, and Matilda sat down among them, holding her head as high as anybody. It grew to be a saying among Matilda's playmates, "as hard to 'put down' as Matilda Spring," for, no matter how dreadfully she failed on something she had boasted that she could do, she always had some excuse ready, and, as the girls said, could never be 'put down.'

One day, when Matilda had grown to be fourteen or fifteen years old, her brother Tom, who was twenty-one, and had a beautiful yacht named the "Princess," told her that she might invite a party of her particular friends to go out for a little sail with him on the bay. Matilda decided on about twenty young people whom she would like to have in the company, and she delivered the invitations to each of them herself.

"We shall start about one," she said, "for we want to go as far as the Highland Light, and get back by five. We'll have a splendid time, for the 'Princess' goes faster than any other yacht on the bay, and I'm going to make for a little lunch, with my own hands, some of my splendid Scotch cakes, just the kind that they make at the cooking-school. Oh, they're lovely! Be sure and come."

The young people all promised, and the appointed time found them nearly all on hand, for the day was fair, and they looked forward with great pleasure to the ride and to tasting Matilda's "lunch." A little boat took the party out a few at a time to the beautiful yacht which was dancing and dipping on the waves close by, as if eager to be off, and pretty soon they were all on board and were having a merry time, the skipper, who was perched high in the stern, contributing many a jolly song and story of the sea, as they dashed along.

By and by the wind began to die down and as the exhilarating motion of the boat subsided little by little, Matilda bethought herself of the lunch of Scotch cakes. They were to be served, with lemonade, and were all ready down in the little cabin. Accordingly, she brought them up in a pretty fancy basket, and began to pass them around, praising them loudly during the ceremony.

They looked very nice, and were received on all sides with smiles and "thank you's." Esther Gwynne happened to take one first, and to be the first to taste one. On the instant, a queer look came over her face. Louise Nichols sat next to her, and as she tasted the much-vaunted products of Matilda's industry, she, too, put on a peculiar expression.

"What has Matilda done to these cakes?" she whispered to Esther.

"I can't imagine," returned Esther. "They're awful. I can't eat another mouthful to save my life."

"She must have burned her molasses" whispered Emmie Storms, who sat next, "or maybe she mistook pepper for ginger, or sugar for salt, or used odious butter."

"What's the matter with the cakes?" whispered Emmie's brother to her a moment later, "I can't eat mine at all."

"There can't any of us eat them," returned Emmie. "They're terrible, and I'm going to throw mine into the 'vasty deep.' It can't be rude, for nobody ought to eat such things."

"Of course not," said Esther. "Here goes," and very quietly they all slipped the poor Scotch cakes over the side of the boat.

As Matilda had passed on, and as each person who had taken a Scotch cake tasted of it, the same scene had transpired. All took their cue from those who had first decided to drop their cakes into the sea, and, accordingly, when Matilda had gone quite around the company with her basket, she found that those who had been served first were "through" with their cakes.

"Take another, do," pleaded Matilda hospitably, "There are plenty of them. I know how they always go off, so I made more than usual. Oh, take another, Esther."

So Esther, urged too strongly to decline, took another cake, and several others felt constrained to do the same.

By this time, a genuine, old-fashioned calm had settled down upon the sea, and the yacht instead of cutting through the waves, lay perfectly motionless, while the water looked as smooth as a floor. Suddenly the ghosts of drowned Scotch cakes began to appear upon the surface of the sea in every direction. The guilty boys and girls who had thought only of how to escape from eating Matilda's cakes, had never once counted on a possible dead calm. How round and large and conspicuous the cakes did look in the water! Esther and Louise spied them first, and almost distracted, they cast about for some pretext for diverting Matilda's attention from the sight.

"Oh, dear! We're really becalmed!" shouted Esther, with forced merriment. "Can't we play 'Simon Says' or 'Forfeits,' or something? We might as well start a game of some sort, for we're not going to get back by five o'clock."

The skipper confirmed this prediction, and Tom good-naturedly sat down among his sister's friends, and tried to second Esther's attempts to "start a game."

"Well," remarked Matilda, encouragingly, "we shan't starve. There are plenty of Scotch cakes."

The boys and girls gave a distressed laugh, and one by one innumerable Scotch cakes began to join the dozen or more already visible, coming apparently with fiendish intentions to torment, from the depths of the sea. The young people all began to grow nervously hilarious, for they knew that a single glance in the right direction would reveal everything to Matilda, and, just as she, having been busy with pressing her guests to "take another" and "another," was tasting her first Scotch cake, she gave that fatal glance.

"Somebody's lost a cake overboard," she cried laughingly.

They all pretended not to hear, and talked away for dear life.

"Why! there are some more!" continued the astonished Matilda.—"Why,——"

She stopped and began to look suspiciously at the cake she held in her hand. Her palate assisted her in coming to a conclusion. The cakes had been put almost straight from the oven into her basket. She could have pinched herself for neglecting to taste of them before she started. And now she had offered her guests such dreadful things that they, little thinking that the wind and water were going to "play them false," had felt obliged to drop them into the sea. And this, after all she had said! It was too much! Matilda turned and fled into the little cabin, and burst into tears, and she did not show herself again until a breeze had sprung up, and the "Princess" was almost home.

If Matilda ever wanted to boast again the remembrance of the yacht-party and the Scotch cakes, was enough to check her, and though it was very disagreeable for a little while both for her and for any of the party to meet, they all had to admit after things had settled down into their old channels again, that Matilda had improved ever so much.

"She actually stopped herself when she started to say, 'You ought to see my——' the other day," said Emmie Storms, "I knew she was going to say 'my new foulard silk,'" and when they asked her what she would make for the supper at the doll's fair, she said, a meekly as you please, "Anything you need, I'll try to make, but I'm not experienced enough to promise that it will turn out well. She blushed dreadfully when she said it. I was really sorry for her."

"Well, I like her ever so much better than I used to," said Emmie's brother bluntly.

"So does everybody," returned Emmie significantly.—Good Cheer.

Miscellaneous.

The Bad Boy.

'I am thy father's ghost,' said a sheeted form in the doorway of the grocery, one evening, and the grocery man got behind the cheese box, while the ghost continued in a sepulchral voice, 'doomed for a certain time to walk the night,' and, waving a chair round the ghost strode up to the grocery man, and with the other ghostly hand reached into a box of figs.

'No, you ain't no ghost,' said the grocery man, recognizing the bad boy. 'Ghosts do not go prowling around groceries stealing wormy figs. What do you mean by this sinful masquerade business? My father never had no ghost.'

'O, we have struck it now,' said the bad boy, as he pulled off his mask and rolled up the sheet he had worn around him. 'We are going to have amateur theatricals to raise money to have the church carpeted, and I am going to boss the job.'

'You don't say,' answered the grocery man, as he thought how much he could sell to the church people for a strawberry and ice cream festival, and how little he could sell for amateur theatricals. 'Who is going into it and what are you going to play?'

'Pa and ma, and me, and the minister, and three choir singers, and my chum, and the minister's wife, and two deacons, and an old maid are rehearsing, but we have not decided what to play yet. They all want to play a different play, and I am fixing it so they can all be satisfied. The minister wants to play Hamlet, pa wants to play Rip Van Winkle, ma wants to play Mary Anderson, the old maid wants to play a boarding school play, and the choir singers want an opera, and the minister's wife wants to play Lady Macbeth, and my chum and me want to play a double song and dance, and I am going to give them all a show. We had a rehearsal last night, and I am the only one able to be around to-day. You see they have all been studying different plays, and they all wanted to talk at once. We let the minister sail in first. He had on a pair of his wife's black stockings, and a mantle made of a linen buggy lap blanket, and he wore a mason's cheese knife such as these fellows with poke bonnets and white feathers wear when they get an invitation to a funeral or an excursion. Well, you never saw Hamlet murdered the way he did it. His interpretation of the character was that Hamlet was a dude that talked through his nose, and while he was repeating Hamlet's soliloquy, pa, who had come in with an old hunting suit on, as Rip Van Winkle, went to sleep, and he didn't wake up till Lady Macbeth came in, in the sleep-walking scene. She couldn't find a knife, so I took a slice of watermelon and sharpened it for her, and she made a mistake in the one she was to stab, and she stabbed Hamlet in the neck with a slice of watermelon, and the core of the melon fell on pa's face, as he lay asleep as Rip, and when Lady Macbeth said, 'Out damned spot,' pa woke up and felt the gob of watermelon on his face and he thought he had been murdered, and ma came in on a hop, skip and jump, as 'Parthenia,' and threw her arms around a deacon who was going to play the grave digger, and began to call him pet names, and pa was mad, and the choir singers they began to sing, 'In the North Sea lived a whale,' and then they quit acting. You'd a dide to see Hamlet. The piece of watermelon went down his neck, and Lady Macbeth went off and left it in the wound under his collar, and ma had to pull it out, and Hamlet said the seeds and the juice was running down inside his shirt, and he said he wouldn't play if he was going to be stabbed with a slice of melon, so while his wife was getting the melon seeds out of his neck, and drying the juice on his shirt, I sharpened a cucumber for Lady Macbeth to use for a dagger, but Hamlet kicked on cucumbers, too, and I had more trouble than any stage manager ever had. Then pa wanted to rehearse the drunken scene in Rip Van Winkle, where he hugs Grechten and drinks out of a flask behind her back, and he got one of the choir singers to act as Grechten, and I guess he would have been hugging her till this time, and have swallowed the flask if ma had not took him by the ear, and said a little of that would go a good ways in an entertainment for the church. Pa said he didn't know as it was any worse than her prancing up to a grave digger and hugging him till the filling came out of his teeth, and then the minister decided that we wouldn't have any hugging at all in the play, and the choir girls said they wouldn't play, and the old maids struck, and the play come to a stand still.'

'Well, that beats anything I ever heard tell of. It's a shame for people outside the profession to do play acting, and I won't go to the entertainment unless I get a pass,' said the grocery man. 'Did you rehearse any more?'

'Yes, the minister wanted to try the ghost scene,' said the boy, 'and he wanted me to be the ghost. Well, they have two 'Markses' and two 'Topsies' in Uncle Tom's Cabin, and I thought two ghosts in Hamlet would about fill the bill for amateurs so I got my chum to act as one ghost. We broke them all up. I wanted to have something new in ghosts, so my chum and me got two pair of ma's long stockings, one pair red and one pair blue, and I put on a red one and a blue one, and my chum did the same. Then we got some ruffled clothes belonging to ma, with flounces and things on, and put them on so they came most down to our knees, and we put sheets over us, that came clear to our feet, and when Hamlet got to yearning for his father's ghost, I came in out of the bath room with the sheet over me, and said I was the huckleberry he was looking for, and my chum followed me out and said he was a twin ghost, also, and then Hamlet got on his ear and said he wouldn't play with two ghosts, and he went off pouting, and then my chum and me pulled off the sheets and danced a clog dance. Well, when the rest of the troupe saw our make up, it nearly killed them. Most of them had seen ballet dancers, but they never saw them with different colored socks. The minister said this benefit was rapidly becoming 'a farce,' and before we had danced half a minute, ma she recognized her socks, and she came for me with a hot box, and made me take them off, and pa was mad and said the dancing was the only thing that was worth the price of admission, and he scolded ma, and the choir girls sided with pa, and just then my chum caught his toe in the carpet and fell down, and that loosened the plaster overhead and about a bushel fell on the crowd. Pa thought lightning had struck the house, the minister thought it was a judgment on them all for play acting, and he began to shed his Hamlet costume with one hand and pick the plaster out of his hair with the other. The women screamed and tried to get the plaster out of their necks, and while pa was brushing off the choir singers, ma said the rehearsal was adjourned, and they all went home, but we are going to rehearse again on Friday night. The play cannot be considered a success, but we will bring it out all right by the time the entertainment is to come off.'

'By gum,' said the grocery man, 'I would like to have seen that minister as Hamlet. Didn't he look funny?'

'Funny! Well, I should remark. He seemed to predominate. That is, he was too fresh, too numerous, as it were. But at the next rehearsal I am going to work in an act from Richard the Third, and my chum is going to play the Chinaman of the Danites, and I guess we will take the cake. Say, I want to work in an idiot somewhere. How would you like to play the idiot? You wouldn't have to rehearse or anything—'

At this point the bad boy was seen to go out of the grocery real spry, followed by a box of wooden clothes-pins that the grocery man had thrown after him.

TO THE PUBLIC!

We have always possessed the idea that the poor man's hard earned dollar should purchase just as much as a like amount of his wealthy neighbor.—WE BELIEVE IT. WE ACT UPON IT. Three years ago it was hard to convince customers that a firm in the FURNITURE business would or could make such a departure. WE DID, and our business to-day is a pleasing monument of its kindly reception by the people of Lynn, Swampscott, Saugus, Nahant, Marblehead, Peabody, Danvers, Lynnfield, Salem, &c., to whom we are more than thankful.

CURIOUS HABITS OF ANTS.

Sir John Lubbock's extraordinary book on "Ants, Bees and Wasps," will amaze readers. Fancy ants having slaves! Fancy these proverbial examples to the sluggard keeping certain insects as we keep cows, and building sheds over them, and keeping others as pets! The aristocracy of ants seem to have all the vices which brought antique monarchies to destruction. Sir John writes soberly, as a philosopher should, and weighs his words no doubt, which makes his conclusions the more astonishing. The author quotes some of Huber's experiments, the value of which he has himself tested. The bloated ant aristocrats, it is said, "have lost the greater part of their instincts; their art, that is, the power of building; their domestic habits, for they show no care for their young, all this being done by the slaves; their industry, for they take no part in providing the daily supplies; if the colony changes the situation of its nest, the masters are all carried by the slaves on their backs to the new one; nay, they have even lost the habit of feeding. Huber placed thirty of them with some larvæ and pupæ and a supply of honey in a box. 'At first,' he says, 'they appeared to pay some little attention to the larvæ; they carried them here and there, but presently replaced them. More than one-half of the Amazons died of hunger in less than two days. They had not even traced out a dwelling; and the few ants still in existence were languid and without strength. I commiserated their condition, and gave them one of their black companions. This individual, unassisted, established order, formed a chamber in the earth, gathered together the larvæ, extricated several young ants that were ready to quit the condition of pupæ, and preserved the life of the remaining Amazons.' This observation has been fully confirmed by other naturalists. However small the prison, however large the quantity of food, these stupid creatures will starve in the midst of plenty rather than feed themselves.

* * * I have, however, kept isolated specimens for three months by giving them a slave for an hour or two a day to clean and feed them; under these circumstances they remained in perfect health, while, but for the slaves, they would have perished in two or three days."

FIFTEEN MILLION DOLLARS AN ACRE.

A New York correspondent states that "in the more common streets of New York land is worth from two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to three hundred and fifty thousand dollars per acre. In the best part of Broadway its value is increased to two million dollars per acre; but in the vicinity of Wall street its value is immensely increased because this locality is the money heart of America. The land on which the Drexel building stands cost its present owners at the rate of fourteen million dollars per acre. It occupies the corner of Wall and Broad streets, which may be considered the most valuable corner on this continent—and yet, when I was a Broad street clerk, in 1840, this very place was occupied by a hat store. The corresponding value of property in this neighborhood has been illustrated by the recent sale at the corner of Broad street and Exchange place, which was at the rate of fifteen million five hundred thousand dollars per acre. Hence the Drexel lot was none too dear. In fact, these dazzling figures are justified by the immensity of the transactions which occur here daily. Almost all the railroads on the continent (except New England) are managed within three hundred feet of this spot, and the general pressure of our immense financial system gives it a value which a few years ago could not have been dreamed of."

HOW TO TAKE PORTRAITS OF BURGLARS.

We have evidently entered the age of electricity, and I offer the suggestion of a detective trap for burglars as among the important possibilities. The burglar alarm now in use, true to its name, alarms the burglar, and he is away. Instead of ringing the alarm, let it be set to turn on momentarily the full glare of the electric light, and at the same instant have it expose a plate in a camera all ready to take an instantaneous picture. The burglar of course will take to flight, but will leave his photograph behind. The same blaze of light which has alarmed him will awaken the sleeping inmates, who can proceed at once to the camera and secure the negative. In order, however, that the camera should be set at the right focus the alarm used should be an electric mat set in a certain place on the floor, that spot being covered by the focus of the camera. In case of banks and safety deposit companies, the electric mats should be in front of the iron safes.—Scientific American.

EFFECT OF ALCOHOL.

Two French doctors at Grenelle have conducted, at the expense of a rich Swedish philanthropist a series of experiments upon pigs, for the purpose of ascertaining the effect of alcohol on the internal organs of drunkards. Fifteen pigs were treated daily upon various descriptions of alcohol, and then killed after the process of alcoholization had gone on for some time. Each pig had a different description of liquor, one had whisky, another brandy, a third absinthe, and so on. When killed, their vital organs were found to be marked with small spots resembling ulcers. Their flesh was sound, but when sent to market was seized as unfit for food.

It is a good rule to be deaf when a slanderer begins to talk.

It is wisdom to think, and folly to sit without thinking.

ICY SIDEWALKS.

Is there anything which will take the natural dignity out of a man quicker than an icy sidewalk?

Let the most self-sufficient individual that ever stepped feel that at any any moment he is liable to come down at full length, and that every looker-on will feel tickled, and every young girl will giggle, and every bad boy will shout with glee, and every stray dog in the village will be there to bark over him, and his self-sufficiency will leave him, and he will shuffle along as meek as Moses, avoiding every very slippery-looking spot, and shying around the places where the gutters drip, and the housemaids have washed the windows.

Ice may be delightful in its place, which is in lemonade on the Fourth of July, and thereabouts; but as a pavement, it is a failure.

You start out some fine morning to do a little shopping. You know you are looking well. You feel sure that if Mrs. A. should meet you, she would die of envy to see how well your new hat becomes you, and Mrs. B. would turn green if she should notice the stylish hang of your overskirt. You trip along, looking in the shop-windows to see the pretty things, and admiring the reflection of yourself in the polished glass, with the silks and satins for the background of the mirror.

You arrange your frizzes at the jeweler's window, while pretending to look at the watches, and you step daintily along, and wonder what does make women wear those ugly rubbers, and you think of your own French kid boots, with their charming heels and—

Well, it has happened to many. You are lying at your length on the sidewalk, and your hat is crushed, and a dog is worrying your muff, and your paper parcels are blowing hither and thither—for the wind generally blows a hurricane when it is icy—and everybody that you know is there exclaiming and condoling, and trying to assist; and Mrs. A. and Mrs. B., securely braced, with rubbers on, are standing by and wondering how it happened, and if you are hurt, and how you ever was so imprudent as to come out without overshoes.

And they take note of the fact that you wear false bangs, and they notice that the feather of your hat is ruined, and they tell each other that poor, dear Annie Maria must use powder, for one side of her face looked quite dark, where the ice had melted, and, oh, dear! dear! it is so strange that ladies will do such things, they say, and fondly imagine that nobody ever mistrusted them of anything of the kind.

When one falls down on the ice, everybody else laughs. It seems to be just as natural as breathing. And the one who falls down is invariably mad. Mad is the word. He feels as if he could break somebody, or something. He wishes everybody else would fall down; and lie there, too. He'd be glad to see all creation heels up. He is savage with himself, and with those who are laughing at him. He wishes he had gone on the other side. He wishes he had taken the middle of the street. He wishes he had worn his other boots, or taken his cane. He wonders what ice was made for. He surveys his sodden pantaloons, and looks at his disconsolate hat, and vows he will sue the city, or the householders, or the State, or somebody, for damages!

Damages? Yes, that is a word full of meaning to the American citizen, and when there is a chance of damages he is resigned to almost any causualty.

And he buttons up his coat, puts his mashed beaver on his head, and walks off where the ice is melted most, and hears the suppressed giggle of a bevy of school girls, and feels as if he could annihilate the whole tribe from the face of the earth.

Ah, well! icy sidewalks are one of the evils of existence, and we must take them along with other troubles, and be thankful that we do not have them all the year, as they do at the North Pole. CLARA AUGUSTA.

A MUSICAL WONDER.

If we may believe the reports that reach us from Munich, there is a musical prodigy in that city such as the world has seldom seen. He is the son of an already famous artist father, David Neal, an American, who has been for many years a resident of the above-named city. At nine years of age the boy heard his own compositions played by the band of the famous Prince Royal Regiment, under Frederick Huum, and was lifted above the heads of people and musicians to receive the applause and their recognition as a composer. They called him "the new Mozart" in Munich. He is now eleven years old, is a bright, handsome boy, and is all the time composing. Some of his published compositions are exquisite, and said to be worthy of the mature musician. He improvised on the piano while he wore bibs, and expressed all his joys and griefs through his fingers. When he received the gift of one of the most learned volumes on composition, he was for days after receiving it, up at five in the morning devouring its pages. All the great musicians in Munich are watching him with much interest. Strauss has been to see him, and has spoken of his compositions in almost ecstatic terms. One of the charms in the boy's character is his modesty. He runs away from visitors, and receives the admiration of musicians with a puzzled air, and has entire disregard of public opinion and flattery. It is satisfactory to have the assurance from trustworthy authorities that he is being skilfully guided, and that he will be made into a learned musician rather than into a young wonder.

It is the part of a prudent man to conciliate minds of others, and to turn them to his own advantage.

Woman is the masterpiece.

NAME OF CHRISTMAS—ORIGIN OF ITS OBSERVANCES.

The name of Christmas came from the Latin Christi massa, or the mass of Christ, and its observance in the church was general before A. D. 500. The festival is of considerable length, extending from December 21—the festival of St. Thomas—to February 2, the Feast of Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

Christmas Day and the twelve immediately following are considered the most sacred.

In the earliest times the birth of the Savior was no doubt celebrated by an annual festival. Many, however, of its observances must be traced to seasons of joy of a much higher antiquity, and those who have paid proper attention to the subject join in the belief that the most ancient ceremonies observed at Christmas were, in fact, but the purified rites of Paganism; for it is well known that the early teachers of the faith, finding it impossible to eradicate the deep-rooted love of the people for many of their ancient ceremonies, endeavored—and often with success—to cleanse them from idolatrous pollution, and so render them subservient to the purposes of the new religion.

Christmas was first set apart as a day of special interest by Pope Telesphorus, who died in the year 138. The Roman Catholics believed Christ was born at midnight, so they had mass or prayers at that time, and again at early dawn, and still later in the morning.

When the common people ceased to understand Latin, carols or songs were used, accompanied by the violin, guitar and dancing, in which the clergy joined, all the people carrying lighted wax tapers in their hands.

The custom of decorating the houses with evergreens came from the ancient Druids, an order of priests who lived in Britain who, clad in long, white robes, used to cut the sacred, evergreen, mistletoe boughs, laying them reverently upon a white cloth. They believed that thus they captured good spirits who entered the evergreens to avoid being nipped by the frost.

The Christmas-tree, which is of German origin, dates as far back as the seventh century. Its Pagan prototype was the ygdrasil, a great tree whose roots were hidden deep in the ground, but whose top reached to Walhalla, the old German paradise, where its leaves nourished the goat upon whose milk fallen heroes restored themselves.

During the Twelve Nights, a fir-tree, to represent the ygdrasil, was decorated in honor of Berchta, the goddess of spring. When Christianity was introduced in Germany, Christmas usurped the customs of the Twelve Nights, and the tree of Beehta became the Christmas tree.

Formerly, the distribution of holiday presents occurred on St. Nicholas Eve, the fifth of December, but in order to invest the festival with additional importance in the eyes of the children, it was transferred to Christmas Eve.

In the old city of Ghent, over the porch of one of the churches, is a figure of St. Nicholas, washing three small children in a tub. He was the old patron of children, a real bishop, now called "Santa Claus."

According to the Roman breviary, he provided a marriage portion for three destitute girls who had no dowries, leaving the gifts announced at their windows. From this source has grown the popular fiction that he is the purveyor of presents to children on Christmas Eve.

Kriss Kringle, or Kriss Kinkle, is an abbreviation or corruption of Christ Linderlein, or the Infant Christ.—Phila. Sat. Night.

RATS INVADING PARIS.

Paris is just now suffering acutely from an invasion of rats. When the Seine rose during the recent floods it drove le rongeur from the comfortable filth and unholiness of his home in the sewer. The ejected army of rats has billeted itself in more comfortable winter quarters in the Rue Dauphine, in the Rue de Bac, the Rue des Saints-Peres, for instance, taking possession with the greatest coolness, and maintaining strict military order, as if in obedience to a common General. The houses on the river bank they have avoided, keeping well to the boulevards. Unless some propitious deity like the famous "L'Homme aux Rats," in Hoffman's story, disperses them, no one knows when the end will be. Some of the host are said to be enormous in size, as big as cats, says one chronicler, of unparalleled audacity, and with teeth long enough and sharp enough to take a piece clean out of a Deputy's leg with impunity. They turn up in all sorts of odd places—in boots, trousers, petticoats, in boxes, drawers—and one virtuous bonne who resided au sixieme nearly died from the shock when she surprised an enterprising rodent in her bed. However, the horribles betes are not to have it all their own way, for an imposing array of all the available dogs and cats is being levied, and the cafes are ringing with the feats of the various champions. "Le terrier" of a St. Denis butcher, "qui ne mesure pas quarante centimetres de haut," has especially distinguished himself; four hundred of the enemy has he slain with his own teeth; he now lies in hospital covered with honorable scars.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Life is said to be like a pack of cards. Childhood's best cards are hearts. Youth is won by diamonds. Middle age is conquered with a club, while old age is raked in by a spade.

The road behind us is paved with experience, while we go forward over the quicksand of disappointment, hidden beneath a thin layer of false hopes.

MAN AND FOOD.

Speaking roughly, about three-fourths, by weight, of the body of man is constituted by the fluid he consumes, and the remaining fourth by the solid material he appropriates. It is, therefore, no figure of speech to say that food makes the man. We might even put the case in a stronger light and affirm that man is his food. It is strictly and literally true that "A man who drinks beer thinks beer." We make this concession to the tectotalers, and will add that good sound beer is by no means a bad thought factor, whatever may be the intellectual value of the commodity commonly sold and consumed under that name.

It cannot obviously be a matter of indifference what a man eats and drinks. He is, in fact, choosing his animal and moral character when he selects his food. It is impossible for him to change his inherited nature, simply because modifications of development occupy more than an individual life, but he can help to make the particular stock to which he belongs more or less beery or fleshy or watery, and so on, by the way he feeds.

We know the effect the feeding of animals has on their temper and very natures; how the dog fed on raw meat, and chained up so that he cannot work off the superfluous nitrogenized material by exercise, becomes a savage beast, while the same creature fed on bread and milk would be as tame as a lamb. The same law of results is applicable to man, and every living organism is propagated "in its kind," with a physical and mental likeness. This is the underlying principle of development.

Happily, the truth is beginning, though slowly and imperfectly, to find a recognition it has long been denied. It is possible that in the natural desire to secure the best and purest supplies of food and drink for a man, we are pushing matters to extremes and becoming ridiculous. Utopia is a long way off, and "Hygeia" has not yet been built. It is, however, desirable that we should aim high and make the teachings of physiological science the precepts of our daily life and conduct. We may not be able to reach our ideal, but progress will be advanced by striving to make its attainment an object.

"What to eat, drink, and avoid" is a rational proposition, and if some of us are becoming a little unreasonable in the attempt to solve it, at least we are on the right road, and ought to be encouraged rather than abashed by the not unkindly criticism our endeavors are calling forth.

THE AMERICAN MULE.

At the close of the revolution hardly any mules existed in the confederacy. Washington discovered that in the southern climate the draught horse did not flourish, and he sent abroad, not for foreign sons in-law, but for jacks and jennies. The King of Spain sent him three from the royal stud, Lafayette sent three from the Island of Malta, he crossed the breeds and made matrons of his old coach horses, and from Mt. Vernon proceeded the monastic animals, which multiplied by the example and made the south to bloom and boast.

I have often waded my horse, during the rebellion, in the all but bottomless roads our armies advanced over, and my heart sank with my stirrups in dread that neither I nor my country could ever rise again, and when I thought of the thousands of miles we must yet march in slough and sand dessert to assert the authority of the flag of Washington, I felt that nothing could pull us through, till suddenly on the night wind would come a sound that was like a trumpet peel from the clouds, it hushed the lamentation of the whip-poor-will and made the screeching owl modest in his mocking. It was the faithful, the tough, the unsentimental, the unmusical, the undaunted, the Washington mule pulling the Union out of the first ditch and onward to the last ditch, and I seem to hear in his bray the mighty voice of that chief who saw farther into the necessities of his country than constitution makers or moral philosophers, and, spared by Providence the curse of foolish posterity, died the father of his country—and of the mule.—George Alfred Townsend.

PULLMAN CAR GENEROSITY.

A Pullman car porter has been telling a St. Louis reporter about the earnings of the employes on those cars. Drummers are liberal, young married men are good, women are very bad, millionaires worst. "I had a sad illustration of that a few weeks ago. Col. Gillette, a millionaire mine owner (traveling with Bonanza Mackey), gave me a dollar. He said with a terrible stutter, 'It is all the ch-ch-ange he had." It was somewhat of a blow, but I went in and got Mr. Mackey out for his brush. He fumbled around among a lot of keys and finally fished out 50 cents! By jinks! I was mad, but I couldn't say anything. It's so with most rich men. There's Gov. Tabor, he's about as good as any of 'em, but he never gives me more than a dollar. There's Senator Jones, he went to Deming once with me and gave me $5. On the other hand, Senator Fair, who is fifty times richer than Jones, they say, came up once and he only gave me $1. He was nice about it, though—spoke so kind, and told me not to spend my money foolishly. Politicians, when they get money, are mighty good. There's Dorsey, the Star route man. When he goes down to his ranch he always gives me a handful of silver—don't stop to count it." The worst of all are old ladies, who want bags and parcels carried, but never give aught but thanks; in these however, they are usually generous.

Some lives are like a foot-print in the hard rock, enduring forever; and some are like a foot-print in the sand, to be erased by the coming tide.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

THE OFFICERS of the administration at Washington are to be warmly commended for two acts which occurred last week. Trifling in themselves, yet they show the animus of the government, and augur well for the increase of that admiration which is being strongly developed, not only towards our Chief Magistrate, but towards the heads of the departments whom he has appointed. It is an undisguised fact that President Arthur's administration has been a success. Even his political opponents can find no fault with him.

One of these acts was the summary dismissal, by Postmaster General Gresham, of a clerk in the department who, in the transaction of the public business, allowed his private business to conflict with that of the government.—Mr. T. B. Kirby has had the editorial supervision of the Postal Guide, and in his arrangement with the publishers of the work had inserted much matter foreign to the purpose of the work, and for which the government had to pay. Mr. Kirby was asked to communicate to the Postmaster General the terms of his contract with the publishers of this guide, which he declined to do. He was informed by General Gresham that his resignation would be in order, and failing to send it in he was at once removed.

The other emanates from the department of the Interior. In the files of this department have accumulated vast numbers of applications for different offices. The applicants have not received an appointment, and the papers are useless. Instead, therefore, of keeping them on file, as has been the previous custom, they are to be returned to the owners, and circulars are being prepared and sent out to that effect. The purport of the document is that the applications not having been favorably considered, and being of no further service under the civil service law, they are returned, and the applicants will take their place among the large army of disappointed office seekers.

It begins to look as if civil service was to be something more than idle talk, and while there will probably be, always, to a certain degree, favoritism in the appointment of officers of the government, any approach towards the purity of the civil service is to be welcomed. It is also welcome news that government officials are expected to devote themselves to the service which they are paid to perform.

A CASE of confinement in the Danvers Asylum is given by the Woburn Journal, which, if the account of that paper is correct, should be thoroughly investigated, and the perpetrators severely punished. While the overseers of that town were at the Asylum a few weeks since they found a lady there, the daughter of the late Ebenezer Dow, of Woburn, who was perfectly sane, and was so when brought to the Asylum, some three months previous. She had been confined there at the instance of her brother, who resided in Cambridge, in order to obtain possession of her property. A certificate of lunacy had been given by two physicians in Chelsea. The brother had applied to the Probate Court to be appointed guardian, but the timely visit of the Overseers of Woburn compelled the delivery of the lady into their care—a demand they had a legal power to make. The proceedings of her brother have thus been stopped, and it is to be hoped he can be punished.

There can be no cruelty more severe than the confinement of a sane person in such an asylum. The names of the physicians who gave the certificate ought to be published, and the notoriety of their proceeding given to the world. If the woman, as is claimed, gave no evidence of insanity at the time she was committed, there can be no extenuation of the crime on their part. The responsibility resting on a physician giving a certificate of lunacy is very great, and the exercise of this unpleasant duty should be carefully guarded. That a physician can be found willing to prostitute himself and his profession for the sake of gain, than which we can see no other object, is a disgrace to any town or city where such an one resides. He should be at least socially reprimanded by a withdrawal of all patronage on the part of the citizens of the place.

WHEN THE by-laws of the town were revised last year, and the law in regard to the obstruction of sidewalks was made as it reads at present, it was done with the intention of having a stop put to the wholesale loafing which then and since has been indulged in.—Of course the evils resulting from the practice are greater at this season of the year; when the cold weather approaches more people will seek inside shelter. Therefore, now is the time when the law should be enforced.

At the time the by-laws were adopted, mention was made by one of the committee on revision that there were some laws, the enforcement of which is to be brought to the notice of the officer upon complaint of some citizen or individual. But that these town laws were not subject to such discrimination. Section 22, in relation to the duty of constables and other officers, reads as follows:

It shall be the duty of all constables, police officers and watchmen of the town, to take due notice of, and promptly prosecute for, all violations of either the foregoing By-Laws.

So that not only in regard to this ordinance, but the other by-laws of the town, the police are required to take notice of the violations. It is not for them to wait for a complaint to be entered. But their duty is perfectly clear by the above section. At the town meeting this was stated, and the point especially made in regard to it, and we commend its careful perusal to the officers of the town whose duty it is to enforce the law.

THE WESTERN Union Telegraph Co. will gain little sympathy in their conference with a committee who was appointed to wait upon Gen. Eckert.—It is reported that they were told upon what terms those who desired could return to their work, with the further statement that in due time they would be expected to sign an agreement not to belong to any secret organization having for its object such as is that of the brotherhood.

This dictation, if it should be enforced, is as bad as that of the strikers themselves. There can be no objection to any body of men, laborers or employes, binding themselves together in an organization for mutual benefit. It is where the members allow themselves to be controled by a few who have their personal interests more at heart than the good of the organization that such a Union is productive of evil.

The outcome of the strike is like most others. It has succeeded in keeping a large number of men and women out of employment, who need the reward of their labor, and in the end they have been compelled to come to terms. But the Company has been put to hardships, and have probably learned the difficulty of getting competent men to work the instruments. The attempts to prevent them from being members of an organization like the brotherhood will fail, and it ought to fail.

Burt's (New York) Ladies' Fine Shoes can be found at F. W. Lucas & Co.'s, Essex, head of Central street, Salem.

Henry P. Ives has just published a new pocket guide to Salem. It contains nearly 100 pages of interesting local information, and it is so compact that it can be carried in the vest pocket. The price is but 10 cents.

Conrad announces a great sale of blankets. The weather does not incline one to think much about them, but when the housewife realizes that she can purchase them at a large discount now, she will be wise and improve the present opportunity.

W. B. Gifford & Co., of Lynn, have secured a large lot of Hamburg Edgings at fifty per cent below their real value, and they purpose to give their customers the benefit of it. Our readers will be pleased by a visit to their mammoth store on Market street.

The Naumkeag Clothing Co. are constantly increasing their business by underselling their competitors. It is a well known fact that they are the only dealers in Essex Co. who manufacture their own clothing, and by so doing they can and do undersell all other dealers.

PEABODY.

Very few people know that a letter mailed in a hotel envelope, which fails to reach the person addressed, is sent at once to the dead letter office notwithstanding the ten day's return notice on the corner.

While cutting brush on a river lot last Saturday, a man named Clary came across a wasp's nest. The insects attacked him fiercely and he was obliged to give up his work and skip. He was stung several times.

Mr. Joseph Moore has a very pretty and attractive kettle of flowers at his residence on Holten street. The sticks are artistically painted and the whole is surmounted by a brass eagle. The effect is very striking.

Owing to ill health, Mr. L. R. Power has closed his Salem store and removed the fixtures to his Marblehead store. He offers some great inducements at his Peabody store, previous to disposing of it to Mr. Bartlett, who will succeed him.

Mrs. Wilson, on Central street, has a handsome night-blooming cereus, which bloomed last Wednesday night. The peculiarity of this plant is that it blooms in the night and in the morning the flower drops off, and it blooms but once a year.

The Danvers Mirror says: Geo. W. Forbush of the Port, skipper of yacht Fannie, and Fred Carey, clerk for Mosher & Bro., took a sail in the river, and along the coast, this week, extending from Monday morning till Thursday evening.

A car on the Naumkeag road went through from Salem to Charlestown, last Friday evening. It contained the Daughters of Rebecca, I. O. O. F., on a visit to a sister lodge in Charlestown. They returned at an early hour—in the morning.

The Beverly Citizen says: A party of ladies and gentleman from Peabody, nearly one hundred in all, held a picnic in Foster's field on Ober street, Wednesday. A large barge and seventeen private carriages were used for transportation.

Several citizens who have never had anything to do with lottery tickets at all, have received through the post-office from St. Stephens, N. B., free tickets and circulars, asking them to dispose of some on commission. If you received a package burn it up.

O. B. Chadwick & Co., last Saturday received the new rating given this town which will in future govern this agent's business here. This is done by the New England insurance exchange representing all the reliable companies doing business in this state.

Dole & Osgood shipped 16 carriages to Australia last Friday. There was 1 Victoria shay top; 1 extension top wagonette,; 1 open wagonette; 1 Brewster top buggy; 3 booted concords; 3 top booted concords; 3 democratic wagons and 3 turn-out seat buggies.

Mr. David Porter, an aged and well known citizen living on Webster street is very low. He has been in failing health for some time, and for the past three days has been unconscious. At one time he held a prominent position in Jordan Lodge, F. & A. M.

Mr. John C. Page, superintendent of Dr. Loring's farm, has cut the woodwax in the Dungeon pastures for bedding. It is claimed that it is equal to straw for that purpose. Our farmers could do quite a business in wood-wax as there is lots of it in town.

The swill boys are a big nuisance. They turn their swill out on the sidewalks, whenever they get more than they want to carry, and it lays in the sun and becomes putrid and disgusting to all that pass it. The Board of Health could well make an example of one.

Last Wednesday Mr. F. Warren Upton, son of J. Warren Upton, Esq., librarian at the Peabody Institute, was united in marriage to Miss M. Lizzie Pickett of Beverly, the ceremony being performed by Rev. E. C. Butler of that place. Mr. Upton is an attorney in Boston.

Some bad boys found a lot of young birds in the vicinity and put them in a street lamp on Washington street last Saturday. The poor things tried to escape and fluttered about until exhausted and then laid quietly in the bottom until discovered and released by a neighbor.

Last Saturday a man jumped from the quarter of twelve Lawrence train as it was entering the Peabody station, when near Vaughn's factory. He struck with such force against the building as to knock him down. He soon recovered and started on his way a wiser man, we trust.

Last Thursday evening as a pair of horses attached to a car that left Salem after the performance was passing the fountain near the big tree one horse stopped to drink, and the car keeping on jammed him against the tree. After a violent effort he was released from his uncomfortable position.

The bicycle riders have an unlimited amount of cheek. One of them ran into an Irish woman who was crossing Foster street, last Monday morning, throwing him from his machine. He picked himself up and began to abuse the woman for being in his way. Some body should have kicked his spine.

Our item last week on Mrs. Abel Proctor's sunflower, brings out the information that Mrs. Eliza Sutton, at her summer home at Center Harbor, has several tall Hollyhocks in her garden, one of which measures ten feet in height, and has had 216 blossoms on it, with good prospect of as many more.

Our town fathers should offer a reward for the capture of our fire bug. The frequent fires of late shows that some such action should be taken. Evidently some old or young rascals think it fine fun to burn other people's property, but let the law get its hands on them and they will pay dearly for their fun.

A boy named Morgan Sweeney came near being drowned at high bridge last Sunday. He went too far and not being able to swim, screamed for help and sank. Several men who were in bathing at the time went to his rescue, and brought him to shore, with considerable difficulty, as he clung to one of them so tightly.

The U. S. Capitol at Washington, the New York Elevated Railway, Oriental Hotel, Manhattan Beach, Harper's Publishing House, New York, and many of the finest buildings in the country are painted with H. W. Johns's Asbestos Paints. These paints are for sale by Samuel Trask, at his new store on Walnut street.

A horse belonging to Chas. A. Sanger, and driven by his son, while passing down Wallis street last week, stumbled and fell, throwing the driver, and another boy who was with him, to the ground, but fortunately not injuring them. The horse was helped to his feet and conveyed to the owner's stable considerably injured.

At a meeting of the Asbury Grove cottage proprietors, steps were taken to present a petition to the Eastern Railroad Company for the extension of the Asbury branch through to Ipswich. It is believed that this would open a large tract for summer cottages. It is hoped that the company will look favorably upon the project.

About two weeks ago a resident on the upper end of Washington street left his family and has gone, no one knows where. His wife has used every means in her power to find him, and it is feared that his continued absence will affect her mind. It is rumored that the fugitive has joined a band of wandering street musicians.

There are a number of boys who think they are awfully funny. They loaf around the "know nothing" station of the Lawrence branch, and when the train starts they cry out as if in great pain, and the passengers get feverish with excitement, and rush to the windows, only to see a lot of boys, who think they are doing something smart.

The Seventeenth Mass. Volunteer Infantry Association, hold their eighth annual reunion, at the Willows, Salem, on Thursday next, Aug. 23, rain or shine. Every comrade is requested to make special effort to attend. Half fares on Eastern R. R. It will be twenty-two years to-morrow since the Regiment left Lynnfield for the seat of war.

In several respects the People's Cyclopedia is beyond a doubt superior to every other. It is the latest one, has the most maps, is the most comprehensive, and is the lowest priced. We are glad to note that the agent, Mr. A. E. Cady, is meeting with good success here, and the favorable attention of our best citizens has been secured. He remains but a short time longer.

The amount of travel on the open horse cars these summer evenings is surprising. Indeed, they are often so crowded as to defeat the very purpose for which many have entered them, that of having a cool and delightful ride amid the beautiful surroundings of this favored locality. It is astonishing how much pleasure a poor man can get for a few cents when the cars are not crowded.

Fully three hundred people from this town attended the entertainment by Thatcher, Primrose & West's minstrels, and were not disappointed as it was good throughout. Considerable difficulty was experienced in conveying people home. Only one car was in waiting and that was soon filled by some fifty or sixty persons and started for Peabody. Some started to walk home and met a car at Beckford street which returned with them. Many who waited at the hall thinking there must be another car had to walk home, and there were fully a hundred of them. The trouble arose from Supt. Ferguson being on the Twilight and therefore unable to attend to things.

We have received the following reply to our puzzle of last week. Is it correct? "Speaking of the apple business, you cannot make but ten lots of them, each worth at the rate of five for two cents. Besides these ten lots you have five lots of two each, of those worth at the rate of two for a cent or four for two cents; and not five for two cents as the puzzle assumes. And that is where the missing cent goes out. F.

Mr. Freeman Wallace, who formerly lived here, and who married Mr. Geo. Carr's sister and moved to Sandwich, N. H., had a narrow escape recently, from losing his property by fire. In the house was an old fashioned oven, under which a fire had been lighted, and it communicated to the woodwork, and but for its timely discovery, serious results would have followed. The rooms were badly damaged by smoke.

Mrs. Lucinda Rood, wife of William H. Little, died last Thursday night at Lyme, N. H., her native place, and where she was stopping. Mrs. Little fell from a chair some time ago, but appeared to be recovering from its effects. She also had a slight shock a number of years ago. The funeral took place Saturday last, and her remains were interred in the family lot at Lyme, N. H. Her age was 74 years, 10 mos.

Essex county elects this Fall, a sheriff, register of insolvency, and a county commissioner. Probably Sheriff Herrick will be a candidate to succeed himself, though it is said Gen. Hun Berry of Lynn, will contest the Republican nomination with him. For Register of Probate, the present incumbent, J. T. Mahoney, though a Democrat, will undoubtedly receive the nomination of both parties. On the board of County Commissioners, Mr. Graves, of Lynn, closes his term, and will be a candidate for re-nomination.

A RIDDLE.

WHAT'S MY NAME?

For the Stomach Ache, I take the cake,
For the appetite, to put it light,
It makes one eat an awful sight.
The grocers smile, the butchers grin,
The providers say it is a sin,
And good Benj. B. just simply moans,
We'll be eaten out of house and home.
A great many physicians do delight
In prescribing me with all their might.
For patients "all run down" having poor blood,
They find me as good a medicine as ever stood.
For patients recovering from sickness, such as diphtheria and fevers,
To help make strength I am a tremendous lever.
For that tired feeling so common in the summer,
The way I strengthen and make energetic is simply a wonder.
My name by this time you have probably divined
Is simply SARSAPARILLIAN HYGIENIC WINE.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The Twilight excursion to Portsmouth on Thursday last, under the auspices of the Odd Fellows, was a financial success. The boat was advertised to leave Phillips' wharf at 9 A. M., but it did not start until 10.20. About 1200 people embarked, and Portsmouth was reached at 4.15. An hour was allowed on shore, and at 5.15 the boat began her homeward run. Many who were not sick going were considerably so returning, and when the long swell of Ipswich Bay began to exert its influence the fall of food stuffs was most heart-rending, and a school of fish followed in the wake. Home was reached about 12 o'clock. The following Peabodyites were among those aboard the Twilight: Dr. C. S. Wright, Walter C. Merrill, Thos. J. Jones, John Ruth, Wm. H. Hall and wife, Geo. Nevers, Addie Nevers, J. A. Lord, Jr., Frank Currier, Geo. H. Davis and wife, Chas. S. Bliss, James E. Trask and wife, Geo. S. Hudson, Frank E. Porter, Abbott Galloupe, Mrs. W. Winslow, Frank C. The question has often been asked how to tell what the signals at the Railroad station mean. When one ball is at the top of the signal mast at the depot, a train on the Lawrence branch towards Salem is due. Two balls signify that a train on the Lowell branch towards Salem is due. Three balls are hoisted for the So. Reading towards Salem. Four balls at the depot and one at the signal station, across Central street, clears the track for a train on the Lawrence branch towards Lawrence. Four balls accompanied by two at the signal station show that the up Lowell is due. Four balls and three at the signal station, the So. Reading towards Wakefield. Balls at half mast prevent any train from passing the depot. The balls are hoisted ten minutes before the train reaches the depot, and all other trains must be out of the regular train's way. No freight is allowed within nfteen minutes of a passenger train.

We have had quite an experience this summer with the carelessness of the postal people carrying the newspaper mail. A very large number of our subscribers who were away, and quite a number who subscribed to have the paper sent while on their vacation, did not receive their paper regularly.—We notice that regular to out-of-town subscribers, to whom the paper is sent year in and year out, there is seldom any difficulty, but in mailing single copies to transient customers and subscribers on vacations was where the trouble was. We are at a loss to account for this, but it certainly has been our experience.

Think of it! The first importations of autumn and winter millinery have arrived! They consist of felt and velvet bonnets and the heavy materials which are to be used for trimmings. Plush is out of favor, but a new tufted silk resembling Astrakan fur will be popular. A novelty for trimming felt hats is the use of cloth of light quality but of pure wool, without lustre, similar to that used for dresses. Gray felt bonnets will be fashionable; indeed, all shades of gray are coming in, and though considered a cold color, the tints are so effective it is believed they will be much admired.

About twelve inches of rainfall during the next few weeks would be very desirable to give vegetation a good drink, make "fall feed" what it ought to be, fill the ponds and streams, and make nature generally happy and handsome. Nature thinks it is "a long time between drinks."

FIRE DEPARTMENT NOTES.

J. W. H. Ferguson, formerly a member of Steamer No. 1, is now assistant foreman of H. and L. No. 1. Danvers.

The engineers have just had a two way cap made for the large outlet of the hydrants. It has independent gates, and is intended for the use of Steamer 1. It is thought by the engineers that this cap will do away with the jumping caused by the steamer when working. The steamer can also be shut down with shutting the hydrant, and three lines of hose can be run from a hydrant besides the steamer's lines. If it works well, there will probably be others put in use.

Arrangements are being made so that the company of Steamer 2 will take charge of the horse hose carriage, if there is a fire during the absence of the Eagle Hose Company, next week.

Tickets for the fair of Hose 6 of Salem are on sale by all the companies in this town. The fair will be held Oct. 1, 2, 3, and 4, at their hose house in North Salem.

An offer has been made to the engineers for the S. C. Bancroft hand engine, in exchange for hose, and it will most likely be accepted.

The engineers held a special meeting last Friday evening on hose business.

Hose 2 have received their rubber coats. They are entirely plain, with no number on them, and will be private property and not belong to the company, as is the usual custom.

Reading is to have a new Button steam fire engine, to be delivered about the middle of September, and a lot of the boys from this department are talking of going up to the trial. Reading will be far ahead of Peabody in the matter of harnessing, as they are to have swing harnesses for their steamer horses. This town ought to have swing harnesses for the H. and L. truck and the two steamers, and should also have a horse that could use the patent harness, and not have it hanging in the harness room.

Washington Hose 4, of Beverly, wish to go to Portsmouth with Hose 1 of this town.

There are to be two Georgia companies at the Portsmouth muster, the Mechanic S. F. E., of Macon, with the mayor and a delegation of citizens, and Wave Hose Company, of Savannah, with the Palmetto band. After the muster they will go through to the White Mountains.

Steamer 2 of Marblehead, and No. 3 of Salem, are going to Portsmouth.

All those wishing to attend the muster, from this town, can get tickets of the clerks of H. and L. 1, and Hose 1.

Mr. Bowditch, of the firm of Bowditch & Cogswell, of Boston, was in town Monday, with plans for the rebuilding of the old Eagle hose carriage.

Hose 1 held a meeting Monday evening, to perfect arrangements for their trip to Portsmouth.

Mr. Edward Jones of Hose 5 is the happy father of a little girl.

Monday afternoon a fire broke out in the sheds connected with the town stables. The fire was caused by the careless handling of matches, and but for the prompt action of Driver Price, would have caused Driver Brown to purchase a new vest. No alarm, no insurance on the vest and no cards, unless the cards of matches were counted.

Members of hose 5 take turns in watching with their brother fireman, John Putnam, who lost a leg a short time ago.

The adjourned meeting of the Trustees of the Firemen's Relief Association was held at the steamer house last evening, and it was voted to call a meeting of the Association in about two weeks to ratify the action of the committee chosen to obtain an Act of Incorporation.

Abel Proctor H. and L. Company and Eagle Hose Company will leave town next Tuesday morning on the 7.30 train for Portsmouth. ZERO.

Mr. Geo. Stevens' waiting room for patrons of the horse cars has been ornamented by a rose wood clock, beneath which is a handsome black walnut frame containing advertisements.—Among the advertisers are Starr C. Hewitt, of this town, Welch & Cummings, Mrs. M. A. Davidson, W. F. Goldsmith and others, of Lynn. This work was designed and carried out by the enterprise of Messrs. Geo. C. Farrington and Charles A. Weare, of this town.

It was a merry party, consisting of J. E. Clement and a few of his friends, who left the Square one day last week for Spring Pond—the occasion being the launching of a boat belonging to Mr. Clement, built for him in his shop, under the direction of F. C. Ferguson. It is to be used for fishing in the pond. The boat was successfully launched, the traditional bottle of wine broken over her bow, and after a short trial of the boat, the party returned home.

About $2300 have already been subscribed as a testimonial to the young man who prevented a horrible railroad disaster af Beverly last week. Mr. Williams has also received a position on the Pullman train.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Samuel Kittredge Newhall, who departed this life on the 14th inst., in the 71st year of his age, was a well known and respected citizen. He was a native of this town, and had always dwelt within its limits, his home for the past forty years having been on the spot where he breathed his last. He was formerly in the stone business, but for twenty years past, had followed the occupation of a farmer; and his well-tilled fields, full barns, fine stock, and comfortable home testify to his industry and thrift. Mr. Newhall was an honest, hard-working man, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was of a retiring disposition, but possessed the true worth that so generally accompanies such a nature. He was a friend to the needy, and a sincere lover of all that was pure and good. After a sickness of ten days duration—during which many lucid moments broke in upon his unconscious state, and enabled him to communicate his thoughts and feelings to those constantly attending him,—he passed from earth, committing his spirit into the hands of the Saviour. The funeral of the deceased was held on Thursday afternoon last, at his late residence. There was a large gathering of people to do honor to one who will be greatly missed in this community. Rev. J. W. Colwell conducted the funeral services. On the casket lay a wreath of ivy leaves together with a sickle and sheaf of wheat, fit emblems of the long-honored and useful life, that is crowned with approval; and that will ever be kept fresh and green as the ivy-leaf, in the memory of a wide circle of friends. The remains were buried in the family lot at Cedar Grove, many following them to the grove, and looking with sadness for the last time upon the well known features, which seemed in the repose of sleep. The deceased leaves a widow and four children to mourn his loss, together with many near relatives and friends.

A man named Frank Luce, of Lynn, while driving through this part of the town, last Saturday, noticed his horse sweating profusely and stopped near the cemetery for the horse to cool off, but she seemed to be in great distress. He started for home, but after passing Wyoma the horse dropped dead. It was a case of the colic.

Much sympathy is felt here for Mr. Frank Larrabee and family in the sudden death of little Mabel Frances. She was a sweet and forward child, and her natural vigor and healthfulness gave promise of a longer term of life than the brief period of nine months and twenty-nine days. It was the only child of the father, the mother having another, a son, who lives with them. The funeral services were on Thursday afternoon last, and were conducted by Rev. J. W. Colwell. Many beautiful flowers above the little casket with its treasure, spoke the tender language of love, which the stricken hearts could not utter.

"Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not."

As James Sheen was berrying in the woods above the Alms House last Sunday, he was startled by a noise, and turning discovered a rattle snake coiled on the ground a short distance from him. He ran a short distance, and securing a stick returned to attack the reptile, but it slipped away before he reached it. He thinks it must have been five feet in length. Not pleasant fellows to meet.

John A. Stockwell, the shoe manufacturer of Salem, who disappeared, is well known here, having married a daughter of Mr. Theodore M. Murray, who keeps the horse car station. It appears that Stockwell had been manufacturing shoes for the firm of Jos. Harris & Son, they having fitted up the shop for him for that purpose. Wednesday he visited Marblehead to draw the pay for the work done and told his help that he would pay them on his return. He received his check from his employers, but the hands failed to see him, and on Thursday several of them visited counsel to take action looking to the attachment of his stock and machinery. It appears, however, that the machinery is either mostly leased from the McKay Company or is owned by the Messrs. Harris.

Mr. Adams, the superintendent of this end of the L. & B. R. R. has gone to Lewiston, Me. on his vacation.

Mr. Frank Giles has improved the appearance of his house by putting on blinds.

J. E. Trask has made extensive improvements in and about his house and slaughtering establishment on Lynnfield street.

Lewis E. Allen has so far recovered from the recent assault as to be able to ride out, but still has to have his face tied up.

The employes of the Rattan Works at Wakefield held a picnic at the Willows last Thursday. They were conveyed in five cars over the Eastern Railroad.

The rate of taxation for 1883 in Woburn is $15.70 per $1000; in Stoneham, $17.40; Wakefield, $14.50; Arlington, $17. 50; Malden, $14.

THOSE WHO USE IT, SAY

I have carefully examined the People's Cyclopedia, and am heartily ready to endorse the same as a work of great value, I am the owner of the Encyclopedia Britannica, and yet do not hesitate to say that the People's Cyclopedia, in many features, is superior, while the cost is far less. I know of no Cyclopedia so fully in the reach of all classes and yet so wonderfully adapted to their needs. W P. CHIPMAN, Pastor of the Baptist Church, Peabody, Mass.

I have examined the People's Cyclopedia and consider it worthy the attention of any one desiring an excellent book of reference. The very moderate cost of the work is especially to be noted. G. FRED OSGOOD,

The People's Cyclopedia, sold by Mr. A. E. Cady, agent, I regard a work of rare merit. Its range of subjects and comprehensive of treatment is all that can be desired. It fills a place no other Cyclopedia has done. Its completeness at so small a cost is a very strong recommendation which cannot fail to be appreciated. CHAS. W. SMITH, Pastor of Washington St., M. E. Church, Peabody, Mass.

Before examining The People's Cyclopedia, I could not conceive how so good a work could be made. I can not now imagine how a better one can be made. S. W. MASON, LL. D., Supervisor Schools, Boston.

I deem it an admirable work. It covers the field of knowledge effectively, and gives just that information which all want. In short, it is just the book for reading, thinking Americans. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Brooklyn.

When I had finished a careful examination of The People's Cyclopedia, I decided to purchase it, although I already possessed the Britannica, American and Johnson's Universal. Each of these great works has merits peculiarly its own, but it may, in my judgment, be truly said of The People's, that it furnishes more information for the money than any work extant. Col. JOHN D. WASHBURN, Worcester, Mass.

I am especially pleased with its freshness and accuracy, its brevity and clearness of statement, and at the same time its fulness and completeness, making it, in my opinion, the most convenient and usable of all Cyclopedias before the public. N. A. LUCE, State Supt. of Schools, Maine.

TIRED ALL OVER.

WHAT RESTED AND REFRESHED A WEARY MAN IN MEMPHIS.

"No, it never amounted to an acute pain, but continued to be a dull weary ache in the small of my back," writes Mr. Jas. Thomas, of No. 59 Madison street, Memphis, Tenn. "This was an old experience, and life became dull music. I was tired all over, with pain in the lower limbs, and a habit of lying awake nights. Recently I tried one of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS and was decidedly relieved within twenty-four hours. It may have been Providence that did the work, but I give the credit to Benson's porous plaster." Mr. Thomas' reverential idea does him credit, but Providence works by agents, and among them Benson's plaster ranks first as an external remedy. It acts quickly in relief and healing, and renders life better worth living. Price 25 cents. Look in the middle of the plaster for the word CAPCINE. Ask your physician about it. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Miscellaneous.

According to a previous announcement, the executive order consolidating the old third and fifth internal revenue districts of Massachusetts into one, to be called the third district, has gone into effect, and the movable property of the fifth district was transferred to Collector Slack accordingly. The consolidation has made necessary an immense amount of clerical work, as every item of property and stamps on hand has had to be scheduled, and inventories made and exchange of all transmitted property from former districts previously consolidated with the now freshly consolidated districts. Collector Dame had some 60 or 70 heavy boxes filled with the records and reports of former districts, and Collector Slack has more than 100 of the same. All these now pass into the custody and storage of Collector Slack. The present third district embraces all the State east of the eastern boundary of Worcester county. Nine counties—Essex, Middlesex, Suffolk, Norfolk, Plymouth, Bristol, Barnstable, Nantucket and Dukes—are in the district, leaving but five—Worcester, Franklin, Hampshire, Hampden and Berkshire—in the 10th district, the only other now existing. The third district will be divided into eleven divisions, each in charge of a deputy collector, whose duty is to traverse the division from time to time, looking after new comers subject to tax, and enforcing an observance of the law in relation to internal revenue. Besides these deputies there are others specially charged with the oversight of frauds and irregularities, exports and leaf tobacco sales, preparation of reports, etc., and the important matter of handling the receipts. In this last particular it is estimated the income of the current fiscal year for the new district will be $2,500,000. The collector is under bonds for $100,000, guaranteed on a joint and several obligation by five sureties each for the same full amount. Collector Dame has been appointed deputy.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW for September is an admirably constituted number. First comes "State Regulation of Corporate Profits," by Chief-Justice T. M. Cooley, of Michigan. John A. Kasson M. C., writes on "Municipal Reform," and offers suggestions for the abatement of the evils of mis-government in our great municipalities. Richard Grant White treats of "Class Distinctions in the United States," a subject that is destined to occupy the attention of the American people as great fortunes increase. "Shooting at Sight" is the subject of some pertinent reflections by James Jackson, Chief-Justice of the State of Georgia. In "Facts about the Caucus and the Primary," George Walton Green unveils the tricks practiced by political managers in large cities. The well known English essayist, W. H. Mallock, contributes "Conversations with a Solitary." The Rev. Dr. D. S. Phelan contributes an article sparkling with epigrams, on the "Limitations of Freethinking." Finally, Grant Allen, the most charming of all living writers on natural history, discourses on "An American Wild flower." Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, and for sale by booksellers generally.

BALLOU'S MAGAZINE for September contains a long installment of the popular story of the day, "The Belle of Australia," by William H. Thomes, author of "A Slaver's Adventures," "The Bushrangers," and other noted works. In this number Irish Mike makes his appearance at the mines of Ballarat just in time to take a hand in a little row that the hero is having with three disagreeable miners, who claim a nugget of gold that does not belong to them. There is quite a lively little shindy for a while, and it ends in a proper manner, as the reader will discover. The Chief of the Melbourne Police has something to say, and departs, a disappointed man, for he can't find the girl he is looking after, while Mother Higgins frees her mind in a manner that shows her former husbands must have had a lively time with her while living. There is much in Ballou that should command attention, as it has some excellent stories. Published by Thomes & Talbot, 23 Hawley Street, Boston. For sale by Peabody News Co.

The SEASON for September, published by the International News Co., of New York City, is early on our table, and contains much of interest to our lady readers. Two of the finest colored plates, two promenade costumes, adorn the front of the magazine, and there are costumes for the seaside, and bridal costumes, finely engraved. There is a large needlework supplement, and ten flat paper patterns. It is one of the best numbers of the year. Enquire for it at the Peabody News Co.

Opinion of Dr. Mott, late Government Chemist, on Allcock's Porous Plaster.

My investigation of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER shows it to contain valuable and essential ingredients not found in any other plaster. These ingredients are so perfectly proportioned that the Allcock's Porous Plaster will not cause blisters or excessive irritation, and I find it superior to and more efficient than any other plaster. HENRY A. MOTT, Jr., Ph.D., F.C.S., Prof. of Chemistry, N. Y. Medical College, etc. No. 61 Broadway, New York, May 23, 1883. aug 8—4t

THAT DOUGHTY DUCHESS.

OPPOSITE OPINIONS ABOUT A WONDERFUL WOMAN—HER THUMB AND FINGERS.

"Crack nuts with her fingers? Why, you can't mean it!" cried a young lady graduate of the Normal College, in the utmost astonishment.

"But I do mean it," affirmed her big brother, who had taken several prizes in athletics, "and I re-assert it: that Cymburga, wife of Duke Ernest, of Austria, could crack nuts with her fingers and drive nails into the wall with her thumb."

"What a monstrous woman!" said the young lady. "What a useful woman," amended her big brother.

The Austrian Duchess was mighty because she kept good hours, good habits and perfect digestion.

Mrs. Alice Strong, of Pittsburg, Pa., writes a different story about herself, but deserves praise for her frankness. She says: "For the past three years I have been subject to severe attacks of colic and cramps, and exhausting attacks of Diarrhœa. Weary of experimenting with medicines, I turned, without hope, to PARKER'S GINGER TONIC. Three bottles cured me entirely. I have tried it also for other ailments with which women are often afflicted, and it far surpassed my expectations. I am happy to offer this testimony for the benefit of other women."

Ladies who are interested in MRS STRONG'S letter, will please remark that PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of ginger. It cures colic easily, but by virtue of other rare and powerful ingredients, it also masters all diseases of the Blood—such, for example, as Rheumatism, Consumption, Scrofula, and all disorders of the Kidneys, Liver and Stomach. It is a vitalizer and stimulant, but not an intoxicant. Prices, 50 cents and $1 per bottle. Hiscox & Co., Chemists, New York.

"Do you see those two men talking over there?" said a gentlemen to a reporter the other day.

"Yes; those two farmers, you mean?"

"Exactly. They are father and son."

"Well?"

"Well, their families are all mixed up. The son is his father's father."

"How can that be?"

"In this way. The old man's wife died. In their neighborhood there lived a widow with an only daughter. The old man married the daughter and the young man married the widow. The young man's wife is mother to the young man's father. The young man's father is the young man's son. The young man's father's wife is his mother and his daughter at the same time."

THE WIDE, WIDE WORLD.—Lima, Republic of Peru.—Senor A. de La E. Delgado, L. L. D., and Counsellor, Tribunal of Justice, Lima, Republic of Peru, says; One single application of St. Jacobs Oil, cured me completely of rheumatic pains in my left arm. I recommended it to two of my friends, the Mrs. Dona Juana Garcia, widow, and Mr. D. Herman Decker, a German gentleman. Madam Garcia was relieved entirely by the pain cure, from terrible neuralgic pains of ten months standing. Mr. Decker was cured of inexplicable pains by a single application of the cure. My brother used the great remedy for a species of paralysis of the arm. He was entirely relieved from his ailment by one or two applications, after having tried numberless other remedies without effect.

The September ATLANTIC continues the serial stories "A Roman Singer," by Mr. Crawford, and "Newport" by Mr. Lathrop, both of which have attracted marked attention. Dr. Holmes furnishes a characteristic poem on "King's Chapel," one of the oldest of Boston churches. George Walton Greene has a timely article on "Our Nominating Machines." Edith M. Thomas writes concerning Lake Erie, in the charming style which has made her a favorite with readers of the Atlantic. Other noteworthy articles are "Poets and Birds," by Harriet C. W. Stanton; "Mermimee in his Letters," by Maria Louise Henry; and poems by Dr. T. W. Parsons and A. F., the initials of Mrs. James T. Fields. Several important new books are reviewed, and the number concludes with an unusually diversified Contributors' Club, and the customary running account of books of the month. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

HAY FEVER.—From Col. J. Maidhof, of New York: "I have suffered severely for the last ten years from Hay Fever in early and mid-summer and in the fall. I desire in the interest of my fellow sufferers to testify in favor of Ely's Cream Balm. My short use of it demonstrated its efficacy. J. Maidhof, 401 Broadway.

I can recommend Ely's Cream Balm to relieve all persons suffering from Rose Cold and Hay Fever. I have been a great sufferer from these complaints and have used it. I have recommended it to many of my friends for Catarrh, and in all cases where they have used the Balm freely they have been cured. T. Kenney, Dry Goods Merchant, Ithaca, N. Y.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for September is very attractive and richly illustrated. There is a timely article on "Recent Building in New York," an illustrated sketch of the "Catskills," by Mrs. Lucy Lillis, and there are articles by Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, Gen. Marshall, Ex-Mayor Grace, who writes on "Municipal Government in the State of New York," and Mrs. Rebecca Harding Davis. The Editorial department and Editor's Drawer are especially entertaining. For sale by Peabody News Co.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

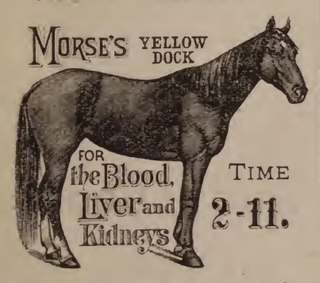
PLAIN WORDS



ARE BEST TO EXPRESS THE SUFFERING SO LONG ENDURED BY A MOST EXCELLENT LADY, MRS. G. FISHER, 29 CLARK ST, NEW HAVEN, CONN. HER KIND AND GRATEFUL EXPRESSION TOWARDS THE MEANS THAT AFFORDED RELIEF.

Facts clothed in plain words are best. Mrs. George Fisher lives in a pleasant cottage at 29 Clark St., New Haven, Conn. She says: "I was a terrible sufferer from Liver disease for a period of twelve years. My family physician told me that it was chronic inflammation of the Liver. I tried a great many remedies recommended for liver difficulties. I was under the physicians' care a great deal, but could get no relief, until I began taking Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. I experienced relief at once, and to-day I'm enjoying good health through the use of this. I had also been a great sufferer from rheumatism in my limbs and shoulders, but I have been cured entirely through the use of FAVORITE REMEDY. I consider Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY a most excellent medicine. I know of many in this city who have received great benefit from the use of FAVORITE REMEDY. It is, sir, a good medicine. I know it, for I've tried it."

Mrs. Fisher is a lady of character and means what she says.

Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your Liver disordered? Have you derangement of the Kidneys or Bladder associated with Constipation of the Bowels? If so, you want Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Dr. Kennedy practices medicine and surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. Address Dr. David Kennedy, Roudout, N. Y.

TOMB CAVERNS OF NAZARETH.

There is a low range of hill, about 500 feet above the sea level, half way between Haifa and Nazareth. It is beautifully timbered with oak trees, and cut up into the most charming valleys. Leaving the high road to Nazareth to the right, we followed a path for about half an hour which took us to the village of Sheik Abreik. It was a miserable collection of mud hovels, in the muddiest of which dwelt the sheik. After much palaver and promises of abundant backshish we got him to admit the existence of the caverns of which we were in search, and persuaded him to be our guide to them. The first was called by the Arabs "The Cave of Hell." Its entrance seemed to justify the ill-omened appellation. It was a steep, sloping tunnel into the bowels of the earth, just large enough to admit the passage of a man's body. To slide into this feet foremost after a heavy rain involved a coating of mud from top to toe. After going down a few yards we found a chamber in which we could stand erect. Here we lighted our candle and looked about us. We found that it was the first of a series of similar chambers opening one into another. Each contained stone coffins, hewn out of the solid rock. The entrance to these were arched. The pilasters on each side of the entrance were in some cases ornamented with rude sculptures and decorated with designs in a yellow pigment. These were in the form of curves, scrolls, and circles, and were carried over the roof. Each chamber was about ten feet long by six feet wide, and on an average contained three tombs, one across the chamber, facing the entrance, and one on each side. There do not seem ever to have been lids to these stone receptacles for the corpses. The bodies were embalmed, wrapped in cloths, as we read in Scriptural accounts of burials, notably in that of our Saviour. "Each in his narrow cell forever laid," they remained undisturbed until rude hands, ages afterward, "rolled away the stone from the mouth of the cave" and rifled the contents.

Some of the entrances to the chambers had been completely filled up. In such cases the partition wall of rock had been broken through. Some of the chambers were larger than others, and there were two tiers of coffins. In order to get from one chamber to another it was often necessary to drag yourself along at full length upon the ground. In one case the roof had been broken through into a chamber above, and this probably led to more.

I had not time fully to explore this most curious and interesting spot. Examinations of this sort in the middle of a long day's ride are very fatiguing. The effort of scrambling about on all fours, or after the fashion of the serpent, is very great, and makes you very dirty. In the absence of a string, you are haunted by the idea of not being able to find your way back, to say nothing of the chance of sticking in one of these narrow passages. Altogether I entered about fifteen different chambers, and doubtless the others did not differ in any important particulars.—N. Y. Sun.

THE GIANT SLOTH IN IOWA.

Our readers will recall the suggestion of Prof. Marsh that the man-like foot-prints in the quarry of the Nevada State Prison might have been made by a giant sloth, though no other vestiges of the animal have been found in that region. Prof. Marsh's suggestion gives special interest to a recent find of bones of this extinct animal, in a sand pit near Council Bluffs, Iowa. The bluff formation along the Missouri River in western Iowa is composed of extremely fine salt cemented by lime. The bluffs, which are from 300 to 400 feet high, rest on the ordinary drift of the Iowa prairie, which overlies oolitic limestone. At intervals of two or three miles are pockets of pure sand from 200 to 400 feet deep. It was in opening one of these deposits that the bones were found in large quantities. It is said that no similar discovery has been made in that region. The skulls were in fairly good preservation, but the most of them were badly injured by the careless and ignorant workmen. The teeth, which are well preserved, are from three to four inches in length. The find has been taken in hand by a local scientific association, and careful explorations of the sand beds will be made.

DISCOVERIES AT THE ACROPOLIS.

Some very interesting discoveries have just been made on the acropolis of Athens. The rubbish heaps between the Parthenon and the museum, where remains of the older Parthenon have already been found, have now yielded several pieces of archaic sculpture. Among these are a figure of Athena, quite perfect, with the dress descending to the feet, which are shod with red slippers with pointed toes; a seated figure of the goddess, similar to a fragmentary one already found on the same spot, in the Egyptian style, with a tablet on the lap; and the upper part of a bas-relief representing a charioteer whose head is turned. The unskillfulness of the artist has twisted it completely round. The colors upon this bas-relief are still brilliant. Beside these relics of early art, a large marble hand with a serpent upon it, as well as two serpents entwined together, one of which has its mouth wide open, have also been discovered. They probably belong to a shrine of the daughter of Asklepios which stood in this part of the acropolis. It should be added that the head and upper part of the body of the so-called Athena are wanting.—The Academy.

The society editor of a certain western paper wears a polo cap. He is not bald, but owing to a lack of brains his head requires some sort of ballast.—Com. Ad.

There are more people who can forget themselves than govern themselves.

SURF-RIDERS OF HAWAII.

Owing to the entire absence of coral reef, the surf at all times breaks on these shores with prodigious violence. But in stormy weather this is of course increased tenfold, and the great green billows come rushing in with overwhelming force. These are the delights of the surf-riders. Each carries a surf-board, which is simply a wooden plank, and raiment is of course almost nil. Plunging beneath the first wave, they rise beyond it, and swim out to sea till they meet another, and then another, in each case diving just at the right moment to allow the billow to pass over them. If they miscalculate by one second, the surf catches them and dashes them shoreward, when they need to be good swimmers to escape being battered on the rocks. But long practice makes perfect, and many of the surf-riders dive safely beneath each successive wave, till they reach the comparatively smooth water beyond the swell. Then laying themselves flat on their board, they prepare for their exciting ride. Their first care is to select a winning seahorse. They calculate that every third wave is larger than the rest, and rushes higher on the beach; so their aim is to mount the biggest billow, which carries shoreward at almost lightning speed.

The ride has all the excitement of a race; for should the rider fail to keep his plank at exactly the right angle on the crest of the green billow, he will be overtaken by the breaking surf of the wave which follows, and to avoid this must again dive beneath it, and swim out to sea to make a fresh start. Should he fail to select the right wave as his courser, and find himself on one of the lesser waves, the result is the same, as it will break ere he reaches the shore, and he must again do battle with the pitiless surf and swim for his life. But the man whose skill and luck are alike good has a wildly exhilarating race. He lies poised on the rushing wave, apparently in perfect security, with the tumultuous waters and the dashing surf raging on every side. If he can direct his course toward the sandy beach, the wave will carry him right on to it; but there is always danger of being swept on to the cruel black rocks, where the ablest steerer finds it hard to discern the narrow passages through which the seething waters rush so madly; and often he is compelled to abandon his trusty surf-board, and again turning seaward, plunge beneath the wave and make his way to some point where he can swim ashore in safety. His surf-board is probably reduced to splinters in a few seconds—a loss which is to him as serious as that of a favorite bat to a cricketer.

The boards most in favor are made from the wood of the viri-viri, which is very light. It grows in the mountains, and is much used for making fences, as it is a kindly shrub. You have but to stick one of its branches in the earth, and it takes root, and soon is covered with a blaze of scarlet blossoms. A good surf-board is about an inch and a half in thickness, about eighteen inches wide, and eight feet long, and should be slightly hollowed down the centre, and rounded at one end. It is stained black, frequently rubbed with cocoanut oil, and preserved with the greatest care, being wrapped up in cloth and hung up in some safe corner of the house. It is called papa he nalu—which means wave-sliding board—and is so named from the papa, or sledge, formerly used in a game called horua, which exactly answered to the toboggan of the Canadians.—Harper's Weekly.

CHINESE PRINTERS AND PRESSMEN.

In working a hand press, such as a double-demy Columbian or Albion, the chinese pressmen have some curious ways. Number one pressman puts the sheet of paper on the tympan, and rolls in the bed of the press, but he does not, as he ought, pull over the bar or lever by which the impression is produced. No, he is number one, and he only does the skilful work of putting on the paper and rolling in and out the bed. Number two works the hand ink roller, and a coolie on the off side does the heavy work by shoving over the lever with both hands, and he has to take off the printed sheet, too. They can print about three hundred copies an hour in this way. In correcting a column Chinese printers begin at the bottom instead of the top; "running over" a line or two they do it in the column, without taking the lines into a composing-stick. We once ventured to give a Chinese compositor some hints about the way to correct a proof and ran over lines, but he told us he had been a compositor ten years, that he learned at a mission press, and that he knew better; although we had learned how to do it fifteen years before he would not be persuaded, and he had to be left to do it his own way. The pressmen, however, are more amusing than the compositors. There is scarcely a Chinese pressmen who will venture to lift up a large page of type; they always prefer shoving it on a board and carrying it in that way; and it is perhaps just as well that they do, for their locking up of a form is not be depended on.—Ex.

A SPLENDID DIADEM.

A splendid diadem is the crown which is to be placed on the head of the Emperor of Russia at his approaching coronation. The famous diamond which formerly belonged in the Brahim temple at Tcherigam, which was carried away by a French grenadier, which came into the possession of Prince Orloff, and was presented by him to the Empress Catherine II., is its chief ornament.

This stone is said to weigh 779 carats, and is valued at 30,000,000 rubles. The sceptre was made by order of Paul I., and is adorned with a diamond which possesses a historical interest greater than that of the Orloff jewel. It was once an eye of the massive gold lion on the throne of the Shah Nadir, and its companion was the Koh-i-noor, now in the possession of Queen Victoria. The stone weighs 195 carats. Catherine II. paid an Armenian 450,000 rubles for it, but it is now valued at 3,000,000 rubles.

PEABODY.

A. A. Messer & Co. have just received a new engine for their establishment on Wallis street, from the Atlas Engine and Boiler Works, Indianapolis, Indiana. It has been about two months on the road, being sent to West Virginia by mistake, and since then it has been the rounds of the country generally. The engine is nine inch cylinder and fourteen inch straps, and is about twenty two horse power. The shop will be closed this week.

During the long summer vacation, the school committee improve the opportunity to make necessary repairs in the different school buildings. At the So. Peabody school the rooms have been thoroughly cleaned and whitewashed. At the Center school the fence has been repainted, and the walls calcimined. Carpenters have laid a new floor in several rooms and an entry at the Wallis, and the walls and ceiling have been whitened. The fence has been painted at the Bowditch, and the building has undergone some minor repairs. At the So. Peabody school building, the well, which has been troublesome, has been made deeper and a longer pump put in.

The old building where the PRESS is located was at one time used by C. C. Farwell & Co. as a shoe manufactory and at that time there was a sink spout leading from the third story to the outside; and when it was removed the hole was not stopped up. The martins were the first to discover it and for a year or two they peacefully enjoyed it, making it their home and rearing their young secure from cats or vicious birds. But after a while the English sparrow discovered the martin's retreat and then began a warfare in which the martins were driven away and since then the English sparrows have held possession. To this place a large amount of rubbish has been brought and successive broods of young sparrows are annually reared. The twitter of the young can be plainly heard between the partitions.

David T. Winter has solved the problem how to render splitting machines safe without interfering with the speed orgood work. The small wheel connecting with the larger wheel, which carries the draw roll, is kept in gear by an upright toggle joint. The machine operates as usual while in motion. Back of the draw roll is a board reaching the length of the machine, connected by a rod with the toggle joint. A small force such as the touch of the arm would amount to, throws back the toggle joint, putting the machine out of gear instantly. It is a simple contrivance which can be quickly attached to a machine, and should not cost any large amount. The invention can be seen at A. A. Messer's & Co., shop, where our friend Bunker is using it with marked success. Winter has hit the nail on the head this time.

WHAT OUR BOY SAYS.

That he went to the Point of Pines last Sunday.

That he wrote to his girl, who is in the country, that he went to church just the same as when she was at home.

He is tormented most to death with flies.

That he hears that the castor oil plant is a sure protection.

He will go into the raising of them next season as a speculation.

He went on the Twilight excursion.

That that trip took all the poetry of "a life on the ocean wave" out of him.

That he was so sick his friends didn't recognize him.

That everybody told him sea sickness was healthy, and he thought they knew because everybody was sick.

That it was worse than the first time he smoked.

That he wants to join a base ball club.

That if he was wealthy he would buy a lot of land in the vicinity of Highland Park and present it to the town for the boys a play ground and a resting place for the community.

That Peabody turns out a good many drunks for a small town.

That Sam. Southwick would make a good man to ride horseback because his legs curve.

GUESS IT IS SO.—Boston is credited with being one of the worst cities in the country for railroad passengers to get through. It is all right as a terminus, but if a passenger desires to continue his journey, he must change cars, no matter upon which line he enters it, and drive or walk across the city to the station of the other road which he wants to take.—N. Y. Commercial.

The L. A. May Co., of Lynn, advertise to sell Walker's celebrated No. 7, Archer Ranges for $28.00, including a full set of ware, 5 per cent discount for cash. Goods sold on the instalment plan.

Almy, Bigelow & Webber are opening their new goods for the fall trade, and our readers know that means the largest and best assortment in this vicinity. Read their advertisement.

The Boston Saturday Evening Gazette, the leading society paper of Boston, in one of its recent issues contained the following complimentary notice to Mrs. M. A. Davidson whose adv. will be found on our first page: "Musical people in Lynn are favored in having an excellent music store, kept by Mrs. M. A. Davidson, an accomplished and elegant lady, as well as a good merchant of music and musical instruments. She is at 81 and 83 Market street. Many of the residents of Nahant, Swampscott and Beverly, as well as Lynn, have been in the habit for years of hiring a piano of her for the summer season. She supplies any of the best makes that one prefers, sends it to the house at the beginning of the summer, and removes it at the close, and charges extremely moderate prices. We commend Mrs. Davidson and her attractive store to our readers in the vicinity of Lynn.

Captain J. M. Phillips, the genial and careful commander of the favorite excursion steamer Empire State, has been in his full element with his families of a thousand and more happy men, women and children among whom he delights to circulate, looking after their comfort and receiving hearty greetings on all hands. If ever a man was in just the place where in every respect he is fitted, it is Captain Phillips in command of a great excursion steamer. He is emphatically the commander while at the same time he is the warm-hearted, sympathetic friend. With such a man everybody feels safe and ladies have no fear who make the excursion without a male escort, for they realize that they are under sure protection. The daily trips of this steamer are well patronized by our people, nearly every day there being some of our citizens on board. It is a most delightful method of enjoying a day's recreation.

The enterprising PEABODY PRESS has been howling for a public bootblack to locate in that town. The howl took effect, a p. b. b. alighted in Peabody, and the countenances of the two P. P. men beam with satisfied pride at having performed their duty to the public, and also reflect the now constant effulgence of their pedalian envelopes. But as there is nothing small about these gentlemen—not even their feet—when they are served, the shiners job is not a shine-cure.—Chelsea Telegraph.

Our brother of the Telegraph evidently knows the same p. b. b. We wondered why he got so easily discouraged. The p. b. b. came from Chelsea and his experience with our brother of the Telegraph has made him a wanderer for life.

Enjoyable trips are the excursions to Plymouth on the steamer Stamford. The boat leaves Foster's wharf daily, except Sunday, at 9 a. m., and on returning leaves Plymouth at 3 p. m. Sundays she leaves Boston one hour later. An opportunity is given passengers to land at Plymouth and inspect the ancient town. Here are many interesting sights and scenes. The original Plymouth rock, Pilgrim hall, Cole's hill and Burial hill, are among the prominent points of interest. Dinner is served on the boat. These trips cost only 75 cents and will furnish twice that amount of enjoyment.

The Essex Institute propose a three days excursion to Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, probably the first week in September. It promises to be an interesting trip. The Secretary of the Institute will send a circular giving full details to any person desiring it.

A writer in the Newburyport Germ says that the only drawback to a trip down the Merrimac is the persistency of the venders of all sorts of gimcracks who make travelling a nuisance. "First the boy with bananas and green apples shoves his huge basket into our faces, then the pop-corn man pushes his kit under our nose and insists on our making a purchase in a manner that is actually impudent, then next the boy with whips and sand shovels, and so on to the end of the list." Any one who has travelled much on our railroads has abundant reason to execrate the irrepressible "train-boy." On a long journey he annoys the passengers by flinging onto their knees sundry samples of soiled literature, usually of the Frank Leslie style, "Spoopendyke," and the "Bad Boy." Then follows a regular list of annoying importunities until life becomes a burden. This hawking on cars and steamboats is the worst feature of travel in America, and would not be tolerated in any other country in the world. The public is getting tired of it, and will insist sometime on its modification if not its entire abandonment.

Mr. Thomas Green left three large potatoes at our office which were raised from parings thrown into an ash heap in the spring by Charlie Sheldon. They were equal to any we have seen.

Last Thursday Raynold's market wagon ran away on Mason street, spreading the contents in all directions. The horse was stopped on Foster street before injury was done to the team.

The new colors for the fall are "Judee," a deep, purplish shade of crushed strawberry, "Cresson," a water cress shade of green, "Grenonville," a frog green, and "Infernal," a fire-red.

On account of repairs being made in the striking apparatus the clock on the South church will not strike for a few days. The clock will indicate the right time but don't listen for the strike.

The selectmen have a number of copies of the Laws and Resolves passed by the Legislature of Massachusetts during 1883. Those who wish a copy can have one if they call at the town house for it.

A drunken fellow made himself generally obnoxious on Foster street, last Saturday evening, and attempted to annihilate a man named Sullivan (not John L.) and was himself badly punished.

We noticed a small girl wheel a baby carriage into an orchard last Sunday, fill the conveyance with windfalls, and after carefully covering them start for home, and this dodge was twice repeated.

A. E. Ball of Lynn, is canvassing the town in the interest of the order of United Friends. It is an insurance organization similar to others in town. Mr. Ball was lately connected with the Lynn Bee.

Mr. Henry C. Hills, assistant clerk at the post office, is perfecting a very ingenious invention for the better accomodation of the public who do not have a box. It will be put in operation in a few days.

The Music of the Rain.

Falling, falling, on the house-tops,
With a music quaint and rare,
Like the sound of a human heart-throbs
On the silent midnight air,
Or the tears of angels falling
When they weep with those who weep,
Or the lullaby of mothers
When they rock their babes to sleep.

Like the drowsy wine of poppies
With its weird, enchanting power,
Coming to the weary listener
Like the dew to drooping flower;
Like calm sleeep to those who suffer,
Or like tears to those who mourn:
Like remembered words of loved ones
From our aching bosoms torn.

Strangely sweet, bewitching music,
All enthralled my senses lie,
As I watch the mystic Future
With the shadows Past go by,
While a calm and holy quiet
Steals upon my heart and brain,
Then I fall asleep, still listening
To the murmur of the rain.

So mayhap, sometime hereafter
I shall lay me down to rest,
Overweary, and shall listen
For the music I loved best;
When, its gentle cadence falling
Through the midnight silence deep,
Softly soothes my troubled spirit,
While it lulls me into sleep.

When, at last, my soul has fallen
Into sweetest, glad repose,
That on earth sunshine nor shadow
No awaking ever knows—
Like the voice of waiting angels,
Or the vesper bells in toll,
May the softly falling raindrops
Chant a requiem for my soul.

Fate and the Future.

I can almost see it yet, the long, winding turnpike road leading up the hill to the school-house, dotted on either side with white cottages, with a fringe of silver maples that formed a sort of arcade, from the town pump in the valley to the tall red house where, year in, year out, with the exception of Saturday and Sabbath, grim old Mr. Nickelby Glasglow held undisputed sway over an infantile domain which recognized but one power superior to his, and that the birch rod, which he wielded regardless alike of jacket and wearer; yet he was a good, well-meaning soul, this Mr. Nickelby Glasglow, take him before nine o'clock or after four, and I trust he rests well in the genial shade of the very trees he plundered to facilitate education.

The old school-house stands at the head of the hill yet, and the boughs of the silver maples interlace as tenderly as they did on the day Mary Thorne and I walked up the turnpike road for the last time. Let me see; it must be ten years ago, for I was sixteen and she was a year younger. I remember that I carried her satchel, and that she trudged along very close at my side. I talked very soberly of going away, and she cried very softly behind a brown veil.

"Going away!" she repeated after me, with a pitiful attempt at indifference. "Going away! When and where?"

"To-day, Mary," I made answer. "You know there is no home for me here since mother died—no home for me any where except the one I shall make for myself and—and you, Mary."

She stopped and leaned against the trunk of a maple, and looked at me half quizically from the shade of the brown veil; she seemed to be laughing, but there were tears in the laugh, and tears were trickling down her face.

"But where are you going?" A pause between every other word.

"I cannot tell you, but to some place where there is a chance for a poor boy; and it seems to me that I ought to go a long distance from here to find that."

She was still leaning against the tree, looking up at me.

"Are you so very poor then?" she queried. I remember I laughed at her question, and she accepted the laugh in reply, and continued, "Ah, yes, you are, I know, and it is terrible to be poor, is it not?"

"I trust you may never know just how terrible it is," I said.

I saw her hand fumbling at the pocket of her dress; by-and-by the hand was withdrawn, and I saw that the fingers were pressed tightly over a delicate silken purse, on which her monogram, "M. T.," was quaintly embroidered in a bright shade of floss.

"Here, Bob, take this," she said, pushing the purse into my reluctant palm. "It isn't much, but it will help you. Now don't refuse, unless you want to make me angry."

I did not refuse; perhaps I did wrong in taking it, but it certainly would have been a greater wrong had I denied her wish. Feeling, however, I was wrong in accepting the purse, the only chance I saw to retrieve myself lay in making a return of some kind. My store of wordly effects was meagre, but I had a ring which in her youth my mother had worn. It was a quaint device of Etruscan gold, curiously wrought, and of marvellous beauty if not worth. She had given it to me just before she died, as she laid her hand on my head and bade me be true to myself and her.

Take this, my son," she had said, "and some day, when you have found a girl sweet and good whom you may love even better than you do me, give it to her and tell her of me, and say that in heaven I will watch over you both and wait for your coming."

Surely I had found the "sweet, good girl," and I slipped the ring from my finger and kissed it, then laid it in Mary's hand.

"It was mother's," I said. "Wear it, Mary, as the seal of our betrothal; wear it, and I know you will always think of me."

Then, spite of her tears and my heavy heart, we both laughed a little, and resumed our walk up the turnpike road. We spoke never another word until the top of the hill was reached, and the school-house frowned upon us. Then I drew back, and reaching out my hand, said,—

"Good-by, Mary."

I meant to be very calm, very self-possessed; tears were for women, I thought, loftily, and repression for men; and I looked down on her trembling little figure, vaguely outlined against the red background of the school-house wall, then I looked down the road—the road we might never walk again—and thought of all that had been and might be, and my heart seemed to leap full in my throat and almost choked me; and then I broke down entirely, and we were crying in concert—and, well, I was but sixteen, and she was younger.

The school-house bell clanged ominously, and rang an unconscious knell to our friendship; the moment of parting had come.

"Good-by, Bob," she said, softly. "Kiss me, Bob."

I bent and kissed her. I presume if Mr. Nickelby Glasglow was looking, his sense of prudence and propriety was outraged; however, I kissed her not once but twice and thrice, and then—

"Good-by, Bob."

"Good-by, Mary."

We had parted.

That was ten years ago, ten years of trial, privation, and final reward. At the outset I knew the world was against me, and that I was against the world. But I was resolute, presevering, and above all, hopeful. There was many a struggle, a long, long series of disappointments—moments when hope was all but vanquished and despair supreme. But I struggled on, determined to conquer, not be conquered; and what is impossible to youth, blessed with health, hope and ambition to succeed?

I cannot bring myself to believe that a recital of struggles, temptation and final achievement, however glowing, told by one's self is interesting to others; therefore I shall not lengthen mine. Simply suffice it to say that from the position of an office boy to a legal firm I advanced to clerk, then to student, and finally to junior partnership. All this was, of course, not accomplished as easily as written. There was many a lapse from the of goal ambition, many a quiet heart-ache, many a moment of complete discouragement. But nothing, however pulling, was beneath my notice, nothing however great, beyond my energy. From "Bob" I rose to the dignity of "Robert," from that to the high estate of "young Halleck," and finally to the pre-eminence of "Robert Halleck, Esq.": and ten years had gone by since the May afternoon when in the shadow of the school-house wall I had said farewell to Mary Thorn.

What of her, you ask? Well, to go back again to the outset of my career, I was then too miserable poor to indulge in the luxury of regular meals, to say nothing of a correspondence. But finally I did write a long letter, telling of my battles and begging a reply. A month passed, but none came; then I wrote again, again and again, but each letter met with a similar fate. Finally, in sheer despair, I wrote to Mr. Nickelby Glasglow, assuring him in an apologetic sort of way that I knew he was anxious to hear of my welfare, and finally concluding with a postscript much longer than the letter itself, in which I inquired the whereabouts and fate of little Mary Thorne.

Then I waited impatiently enough for his reply, which came at last, encased in a yellow envelope, addressed in large scholarly hieroglyphics, and was altogether just such an epistle as Mr. Nickelby Glasglow and Mr. Nickely Glasglow alone could indite. He was glad to hear of my health and prosperity; hoped I read my Bible regularly on rising and retiring; the former cermony he trusted occurred not later than six o'clock A. M., and the latter not later than eight o'clock P. M. He feared I was wrong in leaving my native community, and he assured me I was greatly missed. Then he went on to say the school had rather deteriorated of late; the scholars were few, and the pay irregular and small. He hinted modestly that the scholars, young and old—a deep line under the last clause—were to make him a substantial present at the close of the term, and then referred vaguely to the many years he had labored in behalf of childhood, and the arduous labor that it was. The letter ran on to a considerable length; he told me the village butcher was dead, the apothecary bankrupt, the little widow who kept the millinery shop at the corner remarried, and then—just as my patience had reached the limit of endurance—my eye caught the name of Mary Thorne.

"I am very grieved," he wrote "to inform you that the Thornes have gone I know not whither, the cause thereof being the recent reverses sustained by Mr. Thorne, whereby his fortune was entirely consumed. I know you will share the regret I experienced at their removal; they were excellent people, and Mr. Thorne's name was foremost in all charities, of which the school fund was the principal one."

I tossed the letter away, and my heart and thoughts went out to the little girl struggling, perhaps, just as I was struggling, fighting the same hard battle, bearing the same heavy burden, only with less strength than I. I tried to find her, why, I do not know, unless I fancied it would make both loads lighter to feel the other near. But all was in vain, and year glided into year, and the yearning of my heart grew less, though my love never did. I laid the silken purse with its floss monogram "M. T." away, and laid with it the sweet hopes and memories of the one I felt was lost to me. Then I went back to the battle of life again, fortified and defiant.

Yet never a speech did I make in crowded court-room that it did not seem to me the influence of Mary Thorne insensibly and invisibly affected it. Never a book did I read but the purest, sweetest character in it I felt wes suggested by and suggestive of hers. Never a fair face did I see but hers was before me, in the full bloom of the beauty whose opening tints remained in memory still.

And ten years had come and gone, and the snows of an early winter lay upon the streets and house tops, and shook from the leafless branches of the trees as they swayed to and fro with a doleful sort of cadence, and sharpened the already cutting air. Yet, spite of this, the lights of the city shone with a brilliance undiminished, and occasionally above the sighing of the wind rose the echo of a merry laugh, a broken song, or a strain of music; then the wind was uppermost again.

The clock in the old Trinity was striking twelve, I had passed into Broadway, had buttoned my coat tightly about me, and was waiting for a cab to carry me home. You see I ride in cabs nowadays; they are one of my favorite follies, and throw money into a good channel of circulation. The last chime from Trinity spire had died away, and only the hum of the clanging bells remained. I looked down the street in search of my cab, and straightway looked back again, at sound of a low voice at my elbow.

"I—I beg pardon, sir; but can you direct me to the Bowery, please?"

Looking down I saw the shrinking form of a woman leaning against the lamp-post at my side. The voice was low and inxpressibly sweet, and almost lost beneath the shawl which covered the head and shoulders so completely that only the white outline of the face was visible; yet there was something about either the face or the voice which attracted me irresistibly.

"The Bowery?" I repeated. "I can scarcely direct you, it is so very far from here."

"How far, please?"

There was a mute appeal in the voice, and it seemed for an instant to magnetize me. I caught a glimpse of bright, dark eyes shining behind the shadow of the shawl as mechanically I replied,—

"At least an hour's walk. Is there anything I can do for you?"

"No—yes—no; I must find the Bowery."

"At this time of the night? It is very cold, and there are many dangers."

"Cold! What is cold when the brain is aflame? What are the dangers to a starving wretch like me?"

She staggered back against the lamp-post for support.

"Pardon me, sir, for speaking so, for speaking at all; but I must find—"

The voice died away entirely now, and was lost in a great, convulsive sob that shook the little figure as the beating of the storm does a reed, and carried me back in my life to the old turnpike road, with its arcade of maples, and the little girl who was bidding me good-by. A spirit of the lost one seemed to pervade me, and placing my hand on the shrinking figure I said,—

"If you are in need I will assist you."

"In need!" she repeated. "Oh, sir the words are feeble; I am starving sir! We are starving—mother, the children and I at home. I am no beggar, but we must have relief, and if I could find the Bowery I would part with this—his ring."

She slipped something from her finger, and at the same time the shawl dropped from her face. It was I who staggered backward now, and clung white and trembling to her arm, forgetful of everything but the one hope that possessed me. I did not speak—I could not—and she continued, holding out in the moonlight a thread-like band of gold whose quaint design I knew full well,—

"Here is the ring, sir; will you but it? What will you give?"

I caught her in my arms like a crazy man.

"My love—my life—everything I have, Mary!"

The ring fell from her grasp, and she sprang back with a scream of joy.

"Bob—Bob—O Bob!"

And she was crying on my breast, just as she had cried a dozen years before, and just as she will never cry again, God willing; for she is mine now, all mine, for there was a solemn and beautiful wedding next day, and we are happy as the days are long, Mary and I.

LANGUAGE OF THE MUSTACHE.

Even the mustache has its story to tell concerning the character of its wearer. When it is ragged and, as it were, flying hither and thither, there is a lack of proper self-control. When it is straight and orderly the reverse is the case, other things of course taken into account. If there is a tendency to curl at the outer ends of the mustache, there is a tendency to ambition, vanity or display. When the curls turn upward there is geniality, combined with love of approbation; when the curls turn downward there is a more sedate turn of mind, not unaccompanied with gloom. The reverse quality is well indicated by the common portraits of Shakespeare, who was as much noted for cheerfulness and geniality in life, as those qualities are manifested in his writings. It is worthy of remark that good-tempered men will, in playing with the mustache, invariably give it an upward inclination, whereas cross-grained and morose men will pull it obliquely downward.

A COOK'S QUEER REVENGE.

Considerable excitement has lately been caused in Calcutta society by a daring outrage committed by a Mohammedan cook, who, to revenge himself upon his mistress for having discharged him, secreted himself in the house. Having obtained a pair of scissors, he deliberately cut up all the lady's dresses he could lay hands upon; and then, penetrating into her bedroom, commenced cutting off her hair. In her fright on awakening, the poor lady narrowly escaped a serious injury from the scissors entering her eye as she started up. However, beyond the loss of her locks, she was unhurt, and the miscreant was quickly secured and duly sentenced to a year's imprisonment with hard labor.

Waterproof garments, every one warranted in every respect. See advt.

Letter from Colorado.

DENVER, COLORADO, Aug. 11, 1883.

Denver, always lively and bustling, is more than usually so this summer. The crowd of tourists which is brought here by the widening reputation of this city has been augmented by those brought by the especial attraction of the Grand Army National Encampment and the Exposition this year.

The first of these is now a thing of the past so far as its organized existence is concerned, although many of its attendants are still in the state, traveling about and looking at its unsurpassed scenery.

The Encampment opened its session on Tuesday of last week. For a week previous to that day the city had been gradually filling with strangers, and all the hotels were crowded to their utmost limits. The city became one mass of decoration. Everywhere there were flags and decorative designs of all kinds. To one standing at the end of any of the principal streets and looking up or down, it appeared that the thoroughfares were roofed with evergreen and vari-colored bunting. All along the promenades one met old soldiers, who, ever and anon, would see an old comrade of twenty years ago, and with shouts of welcome strike hands with the fervor which can only come with the comradeship of shared hardships. Some wore in their hats the number of regiment, as a sign that all might read, and these labels were the only means, in many cases, of re uniting comrades upon whose features the marks of two decades had obliterated all resemblance of the fresh, boyish faces which faced the fire of the enemy so long ago. It was a period of reunion; a week of thanksgiving.

The most interesting of the week's proceedings to the public was, of course, the opening day, when occurred the grand parade of the Grand Army and the state militia. It was a day long to be remembered. From an early hour in the morning the streets all along the line of march were filled with an eager, expectant throng. Men, ladies and little ones filled all the available space on sidewalks, at windows and upon the roofs. Out at Camp Van Dervoort there was held a meeting of welcome to the gray-haired boys. Governor James B. Grant, Mayor John L. Routt and Department Commander Eugene K. Stimson all made addresses, and responses were made by National Commander Van Dervoort, Gen. John A. Logan and Comrade J. G. B. Adams of Massachusetts. The procession formed and started upon its long march through the principal streets at about noon.—There were some fifteen thousand men in line. First came the police, under Chief Smith. They were followed by the Grand Marshal, General John A. Logan, by whose side were Brigadier General Jones, of the Colorado National Guard, Assistant Adjutant General R. M. Stevenson, and others. These officers were followed by a detachment of the Silver Light cavalry, under Captain E. B. Sleeth. Next came Governor Grant, Adjutant General S. A. Sheppard and the members of the Governor's Guard. Then came a detachment of the Governor's Guard and the officers of the first regiment, Colorado National Guard, headed by Col. C. A. Dormer, Col. J. S. Dormer, and others.—The infantry companies of the Colorado National Guard, including the Routt Rifles, the Grant Guards, the Capitol Guards, etc. These were followed by a detachment of the Chaffee Light Artillery.—First in the order of the Grand Army posts came Custer post, No. 7, of St. Joseph, Mo., which comprised seventy-four men, William Striblen, commander. The post was headed by Pryor's band, of St. Joseph, seventeen pieces, Sam Pryor, leader. Following Custer post came Commander-in-Chief Van Dervoort and his staff, and General E. K. Stimson, department commander of Colorado, with his staff, and the other officers of the department. The drum corps of the Sons of Veterans of Leadville, headed by Drum-Major Charles Cooper, came next, followed by James A. Garfield post, of Leadville, and several other Leadville posts, A. Lincoln post, of Denver, Phil Kearney post, of Denver, and the Veteran Battalion. First Colorado cavalry followed, after which came Reno post, of Denver, and the Colorado posts. Following there were T. F. Reynolds post, of Cheyenne, Custer post, of Laramie City, Wyo., Thomas post, of Las Vegas, N. M., and others. Following the department of Colorado was the department of Kansas, headed by the Knights Templars band of Emporia. Following Kansas came the departments of Nebraska, Rhode Island and Iowa, interspersed with state militia companies and a multitude of bands and drum corps.

I have not seen such intense enthusiasm since the close of the war. As the battle-scarred heroes marched to the old strains of music, so familiar in those days, each old soldier stood as erect as possible and tried his best to regain the old swinging step, made familiar by daily practice when parades were a matter of business. Handkerchiefs, hats and tiny flags were waved, and cheers and applause rent the air. All the intervening time was forgotten by the older portion of the spectators, and all lived again the scenes of the war.

The day's parade was supplemented by a magnificent demonstration, after sunset, by the Flambeau Club of Topeka, Kansas. This club made a most splendid appearance, and showed the results of careful drill and discipline. Besides the showy torches which they carried, the members each carried Roman candles, and their march through Broadway was a path of fire. All along their path, too, were pyrotechnic displays and illuminations, and the scene was one of brilliancy and grandeur.

The National Mining and Industrial Exposition opened its doors for the second annual exhibition on the 17th of July. This Association was organized a little over a year ago, and gave its first Exposition last summer, beginning with the first of August and lasting until the end of September. The display at that time was a grand affair. Probably there was never before so vast and valuable a collection of ores and minerals in public exhibition as that. And not only was the show exclusive in that department, but in the thousand-and-one departments ranging through the various fields of fine art, agriculture, manufacture and general merchandise, the display was immense in its variety. The history of the Association and its work is a great tribute to Western enterprise and progress. During a period of about six months the enterprise was conceived, incorporated, its objects announced, sufficient capital raised, a building erected and its Exposition thrown open to the public. Its success was so great that as soon as its doors closed, preparations were begun for its second Exposition. For this year's work the enthusiasm and sympathy has been immense throughout the country.—So great was the application for exhibiting space that two large annexes were built for the accommodation of the added number of exhibitions. This building with these additions may be briefly described as follows:

The building is composed of brick and stone in the form of a Greek cross, and, situated as it is in the center of a large area, presents an imposing appearance, with its numerous towers, surmounted by flags of all nations, for a long distance away, its fine effect being none the loser by a closer inspection. The dimensions of the building are 500 feet from north to south, and 310 feet from east to west. It is in the form of a cross, with convenient and spacious vestibules and entrances at each of the four extremes. There are 2000 linear feet of gallery, 29 feet in width, affording an unsurpassed promenade, with a complete and extensive view inside and out. The 800 windows of the building afford abundantly the necessary light to the remotest corner. Eight broad and easy stairways lead to the galleries, while two more and a pair of elevators reach to the observatory of the grand central tower, 80 feet high. One stairway leads to each of the eight corner towers, 70 feet above the floor. The east and west transepts, extending through from the east to the west entrance, 310x110 feet, will be used for the grand lobby and rotunda for the masses of people to congregate, and a roomy band balcony that will accommodate fifty musicians. In the center of the grand rotunda there is located a handsome rockery and fountain, decorated with living flowers, plants, mosses, etc., and numerous drinking fountains are scattered throughout the building. The main building contains over 150,000 square feet floor area. The construction of the building required 3,250,000 brick, 1,250,000 feet of lumber, 700 boxes of window glass, 50,000 pounds of nails, and over three acres of tin roofing. Power is furnished for machinery by a 250 horse power Corliss engine, the boilers of which are located in a separate building 50x50 feet in size. The purchase of ground with the construction of buildings, water service, lights, boiler and boiler house, required the outlay of more than $250,000.

The Exhibition this year will far outshine the splendor of that of last year.—The management is having the same experience which all managers of similar enterprises have to endure. That is the delay upon the part of exhibitors to get their displays in place until the building has been open for several weeks. But the display in the department of ores and minerals is enormous. Nearly all of that exhibited last year was left in the building during the winter, and great additions have been made. In the other departments additions are being made every day, and another week will show a much more perfect arrangement. Last year there was quite a delay at the time of opening. There is one marked difference between last year and this. Then the new idea called a rush of visitors in the very early days of the show. This year the attendance began very lightly, and is gradually increasing. By the time this letter reaches the readers of the PRESS, the Exposition will be complete in its arrangements and the attendance larger.

The two fullest departments, aside from that of the minerals, at present are those of Art and Horticulture. Both are very extensive and growing each day.

Denver has been the scene of the latest act in the Tearle scandal which excited the theatre-going portion of the community of New York, some months since.—The latest scene is perhaps the most pure and promising for the future of the prominent parties of the whole comedy. It consisted of a wedding at the Windsor Hotel, the high contracting parties being Mr. Osmond Tearle, the divorced husband of Mrs. Alice Tearle, and Miss Minnie Conway, the divorced better half of Levy, the celebrated cornetest. Tearle is now playing an engagement with Wallack's "Silver King" company, at the Tabor Grand Opera House.

TO THE PUBLIC!

We have always possessed the idea that the poor man's hard earned dollar should purchase just as much as a like amount of his wealthy neighbor.—WE BELIEVE IT. WE ACT UPON IT. Three years ago it was hard to convince customers that a firm in the FURNITURE business would or could make such a departure. WE DID, and our business to-day is a pleasing monument of its kindly reception by the people of Lynn, Swampscott, Saugus, Nahant, Marblehead, Peabody, Danvers, Lynnfield, Salem, &c., to whom we are more than thankful.

Robin to the Buttercup.

BY SARAH O. JEWETT.

Down in a field, one day in June,
The flowers all bloomed together,
Save one, who tried to hide herself,
And drooped, that pleasant weather.

A robin, who had flown too high,
And felt a little lazy,
Was resting near this buttercup,
Who wished she were a daisy.

For daisies grow so trig and tall;
She always had a passion,
For wearing frills around her neck,
In just the daisies' fashion.

Buttercups must always be
The same old tiresome color,
While daisies dress in gold and white,
Although their gold is duller.

"Dear robin," said this sad young flower,
"Perhaps you'd not mind trying,
To find a nice white frill for me,
Some day when you are flying."

"You silly thing," the robin said;
"I think you must be crazy;
I'd rather be my honest self,
Than any made-up daisy.

"You're nicer in your own bright gown
The little children love you;
Be the best buttercup you can,
And think no flower above you.

"Though swallows leave me out of sight,
We'd better keep our places;
Perhaps the world would all go wrong,
With one too many daisies."

"Look bravely up into the sky,
And be content with knowing
That God wished for a buttercup,
Just here where you are growing.

BEYOND.

BY LYDIA DAVIS THOMPSON.

Not long since, one beautiful afternoon we were making preparations to go out, when a poor berry woman called at our door, and accepting our invitation to come in and rest awhile, during the few moment's conversation that followed, we gathered and placed with previous thoughts food for our present article. Mother spoke to the poor, weary woman of her toilsome life to which, strange to say, she cheerfully responded, and from this spoke of the trials, temptations, struggles and ills of earth we have to battle with, then added as if speaking to herself, while a rapturous look overspread her tired face, "No, I would not live always—and when we think of all earth's trials, and more when we see loved ones depart and leave us here to weep the tears of sorrow, we would not ask to stay, and then we are led to think that all trouble, sorrow and ill is only sent to wean us from this world," and again the same rapt look stole over her features, as she added, "and when all is over we know there is a beautiful heaven awaiting us; there we shall find rest and happiness; there we shall meet the loved ones gone before—yes, we are going one by one, and pretty soon we shall all be home together." And with these beautiful thoughts she left us, while we remarked, "Well, mother, the simple faith of this poor woman is alone enough to convince one of a life hereafter; and such as she will surely find what they so firmly believe in and expect."

It has been often jocosely said to us that we are given to "sermonizing and theologizing," and while we cheerfully accept the saying and further reflect that our grandfather Thompson was a Presbyterian minister, we do not wonder that the "trait to sermonize" is inherent with us, and on this ground we are excusable if our article savors a little of "preaching," but at least we are not bigoted, but rather like to view all sides of a question, and delight to read different works on different beliefs, and, as is natural, draw our own conclusions. While we have conversed now and then with a favored few deep-thinking people, and have read and thought much upon the far past, the mediæval and the present age of beliefs, and conjectured more upon a future existence, and while some say they believe in annihilation, a few have a "fixed hope of heaven," and the rest of the world are at a standpoint, without entering into the depths of all we have thought, from a few simple facts that present themselves, we have long since come to the conclusion that there is, aye must be a future life.

Some six years ago a beautiful boy of four summers, our own dear little nephew, lay dying with that almost always fatal disease, diphtheria. A few days before his death he looked up with a thoughtful mien to his mother and suddenly asked, "Mamma, where is Heaven?" "How shall I know the way to go?" What answer had the mother for her darling boy? Had not his question told her that he would soon know what was beyond all mortal ken? And who gave the child his thought? What is it that prompts all bright and intelligent children to ask the deep questions that puzzle many an older heart and brain to answer?—and it is remarkable that such children are always asking questions that are certain to "upset all one's theology;" when we tell them that God made everything, they invariably bring us to a standpoint by asking, "Who made God?" And from this time the child has a belief of a Place somewhere that he knows nothing about, and this thought grows and strengthens with his years and nothing can uproot it. We only reply to our own questions by asserting that there is and always has been inherent with every being a thought of a future existence, but what that life is no one has ever satisfactorily settled in his or her mind, unless indeed it be such humble, simple-minded folk as we have alluded to, and yet, every one makes his or her own heaven—what has pictured from time immemorial to the wild Indian his "Happy Hunting Grounds," if it is not this hidden, undefined principle within? Aside from this everything in nature tells us that nothing dies—we say that the flowers wither and die, but do they not drop from their cups the tiny seed that lives again in other flowers, and so on in endless evolution; we sing our songs of the "dying leaflets," but do we not know that they go to feed the roots of the very tree from which they fall, and so live in if not on the tree again. Do we not know that the despicable, crawling worm developes into the beautiful, many-colored butterfly that we look upon with wonder and admiration? And so we might illustrate, did not this suffice to tell us that life once begun never becomes extinct.

We have said there must be another life—how many poor unfortunate beings there are who struggle hard and ernestly against wind and tide to be and to do right, but who go the downward way to ruin and only live a blighted life—must there not be a place somewhere, where that which was lacking here to set them aright will be given in full measure, or where at least they will be compensated for the struggles they have endured? Else why was ever such a soul created? As a prelude to our next thought a verse from "Gray's Elegy" happily intrudes itself:—

"Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The deep, unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

How many live with longings and cravings to attain to something which they never reach here; how many burdened with deep wells of thought that have not the power of expressing this in vocal or written language; how many talents and gifts cannot grow and expand because circumstances prevent them from ever bursting into bloom. Is there not a place somewhere, where these longings and cravings of the human soul will be satisfied; where hidden gift, talent and thought will be known? Else, why were they ever planted in the soul? And when we look upon the pure unselfish life, all unknown and misunderstood, cramped and crowded and crushed, yes, literally "trodden under foot," because they are willing to be unknown and uncared for, rather than to forego a pure unselfish life,—one lived for the good of others. It is true they receive an inward blessing, but must there not be a better "By and By" where their worth will be truly known? St. Paul tells us "There we shall meet and know as we are known," but we do not understand the good old preacher to mean that we shall be known as we are in the physical form, but as the "inner man" of which he so often speaks really is.

When we see the unjustly injured one, and there is no wrong so bad, no sin so great as that done to a human soul, we ask is there not a place where wrongs will be righted, and where the perpetrators of such wrongs will meet their just reward? But, lest our "trait" cause us to fall into the error of making a "lengthy sermon," we will leave our readers with only this "by way of closing." We might quote many passages of Scripture that point to the assurance of a future life, but will only give one, and that is where Christ said to the thief on the cross, "To-day, shalt thou be with me in Paradise." It is very evident that they were to be somewhere after death; and this lesson, given by one who "spake as never man spake before," is in itself enough to convince us that there is a life

BEYOND.

There are beautiful songs on earth unsung
That Heaven will hear when loosed the tongue,
And music will sound along that shore,
From these in the long, bright Evermore

And thought in the depth of the soul is stirred,
That never was breathed in living word,
Aye, beautiful thought and talent and gift,
That never could hear the soul uplift,
Shall broaden and grow and wide expand
With wondrous power in the Heavenly Land.

And buds of promise will burst into bloom
Filling the air with their rich perfume,
And the earth-crushed flower rise perfect and fair,
And the cruel wrongs will be righted there.
So we lift our hearts in gladful praise,
To Him, who so tenderly guides our ways
Till we sing in His own bright Heaven above,
The new and beautiful song of Love.

MISLED BY EXPERIENCE.—"Well, how are we all to-day?" asked a bright-looking, pleasant-faced man, as he pranced lightly into the Eagle sanctum yesterday afternoon and slapped the city editor on the back. "Hard at work, I see, getting out the greatest paper on the North American Continent."

"Been arrested for being drunk and disorderly and want us to leave out the item?" demanded the city editor, eyeing him suspiciously.

"Good enough!" roared the chipper man, in convulsions of merriment. "That's one of the best things you ever got off."

"Must be worse than getting drunk," muttered the city editor. "I say, is it a little defalcation and you desire the withholding of public opinion until you can have an opportunity of being heard in the courts?"

"Better yet!" screamed the pleasant man, with a paroxysm of laughter. "Let up, old fellow, or you'll kill me!"

"Great Scott!" grunted the city editor. "Shouldn't wonder if he'd been committing murder and didn't want anything said about it until after the inquest. What do you want us to do?"

"Nothing," roared the visitor, rubbing his hands and regarding the city editor with undisguised admiration. "Do you think I would have the cheek to come in here and ask the editor of the most advanced sheet of modern civilization to do anything for me, a simple citizen?"

"I say!" protested the thunder-stricken city editor, looking aghast. "What's all this taffy about? I suppose you might have committed burglary, at least, and didn't want anything said about it, as you had restored the goods and proved an alibi. Explain this thing."

"Nothing of the sort!" proclaimed the pleasant man, with another burst of hysterics. "I just dropped in to see the men who get out the paper that has afforded me so much pleasure for the last twenty years. I wanted to take them by the hand and tell them how much they are doing for the public and how highly I, for one, appreciate their services."

"Is that all," murmured the city editor, hanging his head. "I must be losing my grip. I need a vacation. There's something wrong with my head. Look here, I don't want to think I'm going crazy. Can't you wind this business up by asking some little favor, so I won't think I've got softening of the brain?"

"Why, if you feel that way," replied the stranger, sobering down and regarding the city editor with interest. "If it will relieve your mind, you might state in your next issue that I am about to open a new paint-shop on Fulton street. Would that——"

"Do you know," said the city editor, as the office boy finished sweeping up the remains of the pleasant man, "do you know, I think I must take a vacation anyway? I never thought of the puff dodge. It never occurred to me. I supposed he was on the leave out lay, and he had all the symptoms, but I never thought of the puff racket for a moment. I'm overworked and I'm going to take a rest." And the city editor went gloomily to his desk and buried himself in thought. It was the first time he had ever been left on the object of a taffy call.—Brooklyn Eagle.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

WHO IS to be the Republican candidate for representative to General Court from this town ?

J. T. MAHONEY, the efficient Register of Probate, should receive the unanimous support of all parties. Party consideration should have no weight in his case.

APROPOS of woman suffrage, the Mormons in Utah have gained a victory by the aid of female voters. Who shall say that the women do not like Mormonism?

IT IS the reserve vote which the Republican managers want to get out this fall. One democratic victory, if it can be called such, does not make Massachusetts a democratic state.

WE notice that Editor Litchman is imitating the example of Gov. Butler,—drawing a fat salary from the state and speaking at musters, picnics and the like. There is nothing like office.

BUTLERISM, it is true, is the issue this fall, but none the less is it true that a Republican victory this fall in Massachusetts means something towards its success in 1884. The Republicans who are inclined to vote for Butler will think of this.

THE Cambridge Press comes out squarely in favor of the nomination of Henry L. Pierce for Governor, and says that they are not in favor of "anything to beat Butler," but the "best thing for the old Commonwealth."

WE notice that our lively exchange the Cambridge Press is advertising a Galvanic-Electric Regenerator. We received an offer to do so, and take it out in trade. Are we to assume that the editor of the Press is in need of such a regenerator?

ONLY forty women have been assessed in Boston thus far. And this, after all the agitation in favor of woman suffrage. Until the women manifest a stronger desire than that to exercise the right of suffrage, there is little hope of its being granted. In this town there is not a baker's dozen of votes cast.

THE Lynn Bee, a Butler paper, strangely enough admits that the "better element" of Massachusetts is opposed to the re-election of Butler. A frank admission, surely. The election of Butler this fall would then mean that the State of Massachusetts is controlled by the "worse element." Shall this be said of the state ?

WE expect to be able to publish next week a history of the temperance movement in Peabody. The article is from the pen of one who is well known in work of temperance and will be a comprehensive and valuable addition to the records of the movement. Orders for any number of copies can be sent to this office or left with the Peabody News Co.

THE Boston Globe is given to averages, and claims the average republican vote to have been 127,800 for the past five years. The average of the democratic vote for the same time is 103,654. Butler received last year 22,000 more votes than Hancock at the last presidential election, and Bishop 45,000 less than Garfield. As the Springfield Republican well says, this shows conclusively which party has the reserves to draw upon.

AN enormous trade sale of cotton and domestic dry goods was held last Thursday in New York City by order of the commission house of Geo. C. Richardson & Co. H. B. Claflin & Co., of that city, were among the largest buyers. The sale aggregated over $2,000,000. The goods brought fair prices, and the prospect for the fall is considered reasonably good. Before the month is out these domestics will be distributed by the jobbers through the whole country.

THE CALL for the Republican State Convention has been issued. Mark its words. The invitation to participate in its deliberations through its delegates to be chosen, extends to the "republicans of Massachusetts and all other voters who are ready to unite with them at this time in defence of the good name of the state by supporting their candidate for Governor." No man is to be excluded, even if he voted for Butler last year, if he desires to unite with them. All are welcome. This is wisdom and sound judgment.

ONE of the sweetest and most expressive methods of the charity of our people is shown in the excursions given the poor children of our cities. Plenty of air is what these children require ; and it is what they do not have except on these famed occasions. The cost is trifling in comparison with the pleasure afforded. It is an oasis in their lives. More has been done this year in Boston and New York than ever before. The children are happy for one day at least, and shall we not believe that the contributors to this charity are happy also?

AT THE close of the camp meeting in Asbury Grove, the usual discussion in reference to the running of Sunday trains and closing the gates at the camp was indulged in. This year the Eastern Railroad ran a train directly to the grove for the first time. A motion to discontinue such trains in the future was lost ; the Association taking the reasonable ground that the train was less objectionable than the barges which would be run to the gates, and which they could not control. The experiment of not holding the meeting over Sunday had been tried and was a failure. There had been no disturbance on the Sabbath in spite of the large number in attendance.

THE EXTENSION of the Lynn horse railroad must be a benefit to the real estate along the line. It can hardly be otherwise. And if the owners of such land realizing the benefit to So. Peabody from the building of residences there, will not put a fictitious value upon the property, but will sell it at reasonable prices, there is hope that a number of buildings will be erected. Many such prospective residents are in humble circumstances, but with a fair opportunity, such as may be given by the purchase of a lot at reasonable figures, they will build for themselves a home. If an advance on former prices is demanded, they will not do so, and any improvement in this direction will be defeated. If these owners should have their land for house lots assessed at anywhere near the value they put upon it when a prospective purchaser is found, they would make such a howling as would be heard all over the town.

THE LYNN Union inquires where is the Pierce boom ? We are not aware that there has been any such boom, certainly not in our vicinity. The Republicans hereabouts have had enough of booms, and are decidedly adverse to them. It could hardly be otherwise than that the names of distinguished men of the party should be thought of, and their names mentioned. But we are sorry to think that there was any indication of a boom. We shall be glad to support Henry L. Pierce, if the convention decide that he is the man. We can say the same of others whom we could name. We may have our personal preferences, but believe that we should waive any such for the best good of the party. What that is, we are content to leave with the convention. We have not long to wait. Let us have an end of booms. A united party, echoing the voice of the convention, will elect its candidate this fall.

WE HAVE been asked several times the past week, by patrons of the Naumkeag Railroad, where the "starter" at the station in Salem had gone ? And it is rumored that the office has been abolished, which is confirmed by seeing Mr. Tibbets on the cars to the Willows. We are sorry for this. Not only our people but especially those from the Lynn road are apt to get on wrong cars at the Salem station. There are no through cars to the Willows. And for the past few weeks the cars have run on better time. The people have found Conductor Tibbets, as starter, one of the most agreeable fellows in the world, and we have heard many enthusiastic expressions of approval at the liberality of management. The road is having a large business this year—larger than ever before. The Lynn road has brought thousands of patrons. The freight to the Willows has been unprecedented. There is surely need of just such a man as Tibbets at the station in Salem. The patrons of the road surely appreciate it, and their accommodation by the management of the road is what they ought, above all things, to desire. For the good of the road, we think a mistake will be made if there is to be no "starter" at the Salem location.

THIS WEEK marks the close of the vacation season, proper, and the opening of the season before the footlights. Our people are to have many attractions from which to select. In a musical way, the new Bijou Theatre, in Boston, has many novelties. The season at the Boston Theatre after a week of minstrelsy now in operation, opens next week with Mr. F. S. Chanfrau as "Kit." What would the season at the Boston be without Chanfrau to open it ? He has done it for eleven years. There is to follow a new play for which great preparations have been made, besides opera and the usual run of first class entertainment. At the Park Theatre there are to be lots of stars, opening this week with Roland Reed in "Cheek." The Madison Square Company are to play an engagement at this house, as well as the Union Square Company, Annie Pixley, Lawrence Barrett and others who will be duly announced.

In Salem, Moulton & Johnson, the veteran managers, are early in the field. They have engagements with the best of companies in advance, and N. W. Andrews & Co., have also engaged some of their successes of last year, as well as new attractions. It is rumored that new scenery will grace the eye in this hall, for which we ought to be thankful. The opening of the dramatic season in Salem will occur Sept. 17, on which occasion the Boston Theatre Company will begin their New England tour with the 234th performance of the "World."

In our own town, there are plans in progress for entertainments at the new Town Hall, the success of which it is too early to predict. The hall will be ready about Oct 1st, in season for the winter season, and it is to be hoped that with the large and fine stage and new scenery, the support of our people can be relied upon in the production of entertainments such as have never been seen in this town. It will rest entirely with them whether the failures of the past, in the show line, are to be repeated in the new hall. We do not believe they will be. We know of no reason why the best companies in the country should not prefer to come here. They will if they are patronized. The seating capacity is largely in excess of Mechanic Hall, in Salem; there is a better stage, better accommodations for the performers, in the hall, and in fact the hall is superior in every way, and the theatre managers will not be slow in finding it out.

The committee of arrangements for the Fair of the Essex Agricultural Society which is to be held Tuesday, Sept. 25., have chosen their sub-committees. The address before the society will be delivered in the lower hall of the Pavilion and the dinner will be served by W. P. Davis of the Pavilion, in the hall above. James P. King, of this town, is one of the sub-committee on Exhibition Grounds, also to locate a place for the draft of horses and oxen. G. M. Whipple, of Salem, is chairman of the committee on music, and Mayor Hill on police.

The Peabody Press has put a likeness of Gov. Butler in the centre of its bulletin board. This is supposed to indicate that the paper has gone over to the Butler side. It has always been strong anti.—Boston Herald.

The likeness referred to is a small 3x5 affair, and was placed in the centre of a lot of handbills posted by one of our customers, to attract attention. The Herald must be hard up for "straws" to catch on to this as an indication of our politics. The Press is still an "anti Butler" paper.

A paper they must have at Springfield, the Democrats think, and the necessary amount of stock has accordingly been taken. It will probably be a daily evening paper, with W. T. Tucker, Lynn correspondent of the Boston Journal, and B. F. Arrington, of the Salem News, as managers, and the first number is expected to appear within a month.—Palmer Journal.

Attention of our readers is desired to the advertisement of the private school of Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Woodman, of Salem, which is now in its seventh year. There is an Art School connected with it in which instruction is given at the moderate price of $5 for ten lessons. The reputation of Mr. and Mrs. Woodman is guarantee that all the pupils of this school will receive the best instruction and most careful attention.

To-morrow the favorite steamer Empire State will visit the North Shore of Massachusetts, a trip which is admired by all. Friday is the Provincetown trip, where passengers are allowed to land, and Saturday there will be a matinee trip in the harbor. Sunday the boat will again make Provincetown, and Mondays fishing trips are the order of the day.

The St. John's Catholic Temperance society of this town and the Woburn society, held their annual picnic at Nahnasset Grove last Thursday; a large party attended. It was a financial success, and a good time.

At 11.30 yesterday forenoon the fence in the rear of Baldwin's Hotel was discovered to be on fire, and blazed briskly for a few minutes. It was extinguished by the E. R. R. employes with a few pails of water.

Mr. Samuel Trask has laid a nice brick sidewalk in front of the entrance to his new store on Walnut street, and also set edge stones and hitching posts. The grade of the sidewalk and street should be raised to correspond.

A young son of Engineer Pettee at the pumping station, fell from a hammock last Thursday afternoon, making a compound fracture of the right arm. He is a bright little fellow and we trust will recover as soon as possible.

Base Ball: A picked nine defeated the Actives by a score of 32 to 4 last Saturday, and the Wanderers defeated the Columbians of Salem by a score of 21 to 15. The Peabodys and the Hairpins 28 to 10 in favor of the former.

Services will be resumed next Sunday at all the churches. In the Universalist the Sabbath School will be at 10.15 A. M., and the preaching service at 2.15 P. M. At the Unitarian and Baptist the services will be at the usual times.

Some unknown and malicious person daubed the windows of the basement of the Catholic church with lime, one evening last week, and also stole a quantity of wood blocking used by the contractors who are building the spire.

The second Annual Excursion of the Suburban Press Association will take place next week, the party visiting Lake Memphramagog, leaving Boston Saturday, Sept. 8th. We wish them all the pleasure that can be got out of the trip.

The Boston Journal of Monday contained a correspondence by some one who had visited our town. They visited the Peabody Institute, and spoke in high terms of the gentlemanly treatment they received at the hands of the janitor, Mr. John McKean.

The annual convention of the Essex County Catholic Total Abstinence Union will be held at Danvers, Tuesday, Sept. 4th. The St. John's of Peabody will send Chas. J. Houghton, John Duffy and Timothy Cunningham as delegates to the convention.

Quite a number of the brothers of Naumkeag Encampment, I. O. O. F., went to Boston last Thursday to meet the members of the Ethan Allen engine company of Burlington, Vermont. Those who visited Burlington last summer will not forget the Ethans.

John L. Sullivan's bar room in Boston seems to have an attraction for Peabody people. Five well known young men were noticed around there one day last week by a party passing. The slugger has a number of friends among our would-be sporting men.

Last Saturday night, Patrick Daley and Patrick Smith filled themselves with the ardent, then started to serenade the inhabitants of Upton street. A discord in the music caused a slight misunderstanding and their night's entertainment ended in a mutual row.

Sometimes there is a very disagreeable odor in the vicinity of Grove street. To persons in the horse cars it is worse than the North river smell. Where it comes and whether it could be classed as a nuisance and abated, are important questions to residents in the vicinity.

As Mr. William Perkins was driving up Lowell street last Friday evening, his horse in turning into Chestnut street struck a lamp post, throwing the occupant to the ground, bruising his face considerably, but he fortunately escaped serious injury; the wagon was slightly damaged.

Much complaint is being made about the workmen who repair the water system during the night. They seem to have no regard for the people about them wishing to sleep, but shout and even make more noise than they do in the day time. It ought to be stopped, and doubtless will be.

A pretty severe fight was indulged in at the saloon of Lawrence Cuddire on Mill street last Thursday evening, the contestants being the proprietor and one William Dalton. During the contest Dalton was severely handled; Cuddire was arrested and last Saturday was fined $10 and costs. Appealed.

Two brothers met on Harris street, at the house of a sister, last Sunday, who had not met for more than thirty years, and each supposed the other dead. One came direct from California, where he went shortly after the gold excitement in '49, and the other has been a sailor for many years.

We are pleased to state that Mr. A. E. Cady, agent for the People's Cyclopedia, is to be in town quite often, although he has moved his headquarters to Danvers. He will be pleased to wait upon all patrons if they direct postal to him, to Peabody. The work has met with an extensive sale in town, and as the agent's stay in town has been short, he has not been able to call upon all. The following is one out of a thousand of recommendations equally as strong : I have examined the People's Cyclopedia with considerable care, and I do not hesitate to commend it as a work of unusual merit. Any one who desires a reference book of this character, cannot do better than to secure a copy of this work. Its marked excellence is best attested by the ready and extensive sale it has met with. J. N. Ham, principal of High School, Peabody Mass.

People who would have their furnaces ready for lighting when the chilly autumn days arrive, should have them repaired and put in order now, while it may be done without the usual hurry of a rush. Caskin Bros. are attending to such repairs, and are also selling some of the best furnaces in the market.

A RIDDLE.

WHAT'S MY NAME ?

For the Stomach Ache, I take the cake,
For the appetite, to put it light,
It makes one eat an awful sight.
The grocers smile, the butchers grin,
The providers say it is a sin,
And good Benj. B. just simply moans,
We'll be eaten out of house and home.
A great many physicians do delight
In prescribing me with all their might.
For patients "all run down" having poor blood,
They find me as good a medicine as ever stood.
For patients recovering from sickness, such as diphtheria and fevers,
To help make strength I am a tremendous lever.
For that tired feeling so common in the summer,
The way I strengthen and make energetic is simply a wonder.
My name by this time you have probably divined
Is simply SARSAPARILLIAN HYGIENIC WINE.

Sold in Peabody by WILLIAM T. LEE and HAZEN A. SPAULDING. At wholesale and by jobbers generally. Laboratory at Essex. B. F. Raymond, Sole Proprietor.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Mr. James N. Ham, principal of the Peabody High School, was elected last Thursday evening principal of the High School in Nashua, N. H., at a salary the first year of $1800. The position offered is one of great responsibility and the experience of Mr. Ham in our school for the last nine years is abundant proof of his qualifications to assume the position. The school numbers about two hundred pupils, and in the performance of his duties he will have the assistance of four teachers. There are three courses of study, a Classical course of four years, an English course of the same length, and a Commercial course of two years. The session of the school begins Sept. 17. Mr. Ham came to Peabody in the fall of 1874, succeeding Mr. Grose as principal of the Peabody High School. He has held that position longer than any other principal since the school was established, and about one half of the entire alumni of the school have graduated under him. At the same time, Miss Sarah J. C. Needham, who had just returned from Europe, was elected second assistant of the school, and on the resignation of Miss Patten, which occurred shortly after, she was promoted to the place of first assistant, remaining until last year. Mr. Ham and Miss Needham were thus teachers together in the school for nearly eight years. Upon the promotion of Miss Needham, Miss Cleveland was elected second assistant and afterwards Miss Barrows, who remained until the last term of the school. During these nine years Mr. Ham has had the love and respect of his scholars, and has been a competent and faithful instructor. We learn that he was elected by the School Committee of Nashua on the informal ballot; there being but two votes cast out of twelve, for any other candidate. We congratulate the people of Nashua upon their choice. Mr Ham's friends in this town have been firm friends; we shall regret to lose him from our midst, but our best wishes go with him to his new field oflabor.

Last Saturday evening considerable bad blood was developed in a drunken row near Tapley's brook. The parties were Patrick Huse and Richard H. Carroll. They had been on good terms and been drinking together at the rum shops on Foster street. The trouble began about a whip which Carroll had and Huse claimed as his property and which he succeeded in getting away from Carroll, knocking him down to do it. Carroll then drew a pocket knife and stabbed Huse in the back and shoulder. The fight was then continued and both were so badly used up that a physician was summoned. A warrant was issued for Carroll's arrest and in the police court this morning Huse acknowledged satisfaction and Carroll paid the costs amounting to $6. He was easily satisfied.

A man named Thomas Farrell, in the employ of Richardson Doyle & Co., was seriously injured last Saturday by the elevator on which he was standing giving way, and falling from the third story of the building to the basement, a distance of some forty feet. The man was taken in charge by the proprietors, who immediately called a physician. His left leg was badly crushed in the descent, besides receiving other severe bruises. After a careful examination the doctors found the leg would have to be amputated, which was done by Dr. Carlton of Salem, the leg being cut off below the knee. At last accounts the patient was doing well. He is sixty years of age and has been in the employ of the firm for a number of years.

Yesterday afternoon a four horse team belonging to Mr. J. B. Thomas became frightened while approaching a car in the freight yard, and ran. The driver, Aaron Foster, and a companion George Hutchinson were thrown from the seat to the ground, one wheel passing over Mr. Foster's body, yet not seriously injuring him. Mr. Hutchinson was badly cut and bruised and it is feared internally injured. He was taken to his home. The horses ran across the square, several attempts being made to stop them, but to no avail until they were opposite C. A. Thomas' market, where they were checked. The wagon was returned to the driver, uninjured.

Last Friday evening William Walsh jumped from a horse car at Grove street, and before he reached the sidewalk he was run into and knocked down by a couple of young fellows in a buggy. His lip was badly cut and for a few minutes it was feared he had sustained serious injuries. After resting by the roadside a short time he was able to proceed home. The parties in the buggy did not stop to see what damage was done.

A horse belonging to Edward Wilcox, of Boston street, ran away on Stevens street last Thursday, doing but slight injury.

Our community will be pained to learn of the decease of Thomas W. Fox which occurred Monday morning in Worcester, Mass. Mr. Fox has had symptoms of heart difficulty of a serious nature for the past year, but he has been able to attend to his business until last Thursday, when he went to the house of his brother in Worcester where he died. Mr. Fox married the daughter of the late George M. Teel about seventeen years ago, and has resided in town until recently About a year ago he moved to Boston it being more convenient for his business. He was in the employ of the late George Upton nearly twelve years, the latter part of the time assisting very materially in the management of the business. Since the decease of George Upton he has continued as the valued adviser of Mr. King Upton, and his loss will be felt not only by his business associates but by those who knew him in social life. His widow has the cordial sympathy of the community. His funeral will take place to-morrow at Worcester at 2 P. M.

A couple of young men of this town have had more experience in this world's wickedness the past week than they would have had had they remained at home. They were employed at McClure's currying shop and as the story goes, drew two weeks pay on Monday of last week and went to Boston. They invested some of their money in "that which cheers, etc.," and also in some new clothes. They drifted in to places of questionable character said to exist in that city and kept it up until last Friday, when they returned looking as if they had been playing with a buzz saw. Their money was all gone and their new clothes had been exchanged for less expensive habiliments. It is hoped their experience will last a life time.

Dennis Buckley, well known in town, as he was in the employ of Mr. N. M. Quint for a number of years, has got into trouble. He has of late been engaged in the liquor business in Salem and has been imposed upon by a lot of roughs until patience ceased to be a virtue, and Tuesday of last week he seized one of them named Lawrence Corrigan and threw him down stairs, fracturing his skull from which he died. Buckley was held in $10,000 bonds for the action of the higher court. He will be arraigned upon a charge of manslaughter on Friday of this week. He has been in a state of high nervous excitement, and the news of Corrigan's death was kept from him on Saturday.

School re-opens next Monday, and the boys and girls are delighted to know their long vacation is at an end. Of course they have longed for the pleasant associations of the school room during their dull vacation. And the teachers have rested on a farm away back in the country where everything was "so still" and quiet, that they thought they would go crazy. Oh, how they have longed to once again assume their charges and draw their monthly salaries. And the mothers, those weary, tired mothers, how gladly they welcome the time when the vacations close.

Between the hours of twelve and half past twelve last Friday night, the residents in the vicinity of Elm street were aroused by scream after scream that rent the midnight air. People half nude ran into the yards and streets and affrighted wives and children tremblingly awaited the news of a horrible tragedy, but after a few moments all noise ceased and quietness reigned. An investigation found that the whole trouble occurred in a tenement house owned by Isaac Hardy and occupied by a family by the name of McCarty, who were having a family jar, and the female with the good lungs, no doubt, was getting the worst of the argument.

The School Committee have elected Prof. J. Y. Bergen, Jr., of Galesburg, Ill., as principal of the Peabody High School, to succeed James N. Ham. Mr. Bergen is a graduate of Antioch College and was a tutor in that college for one year after his graduation. He then taught in the High School in Chicago, Ill., leaving this position to become principal of Deerfield Academy in this state. In 1880 he was appointed Professor of Mathematics in Lombard University, Indiana. Mr. Bergen has been very successful as a teacher, but on account of his wife's health he desired to remove to this state.

At a meeting of the School Committee yesterday afternoon, Miss Kate P. Richardson, who had been elected second assissant of the High School to succeed Miss Little, was elected first assistant. Miss Richardson has recently been teaching in Newton. Miss Alice C. Osborne of this town, daughter of the late George A. Osborne, and a graduate of Smith College, Northampton, was chosen second assistant. The matter of a change in some of the text books in use in the grammar schools was considered, but no decision arrived at.

The whiteners at F. Osborne Jr. & Co., are having a week's vacation as they have caught up with the stock.

Mr. Geo. W. Fiske, of Danvers, formerly president of the Boston Produce Exchange, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his marriage last Monday evening. There was a large and brilliant company present. Rev. C. N. Smith, of Peabody, chaplain of the Boston ladies and gentlemen's social union, of which Mr. Fiske was once president, made a hearty congratulatory address, and in closing he presented a costly diamond ring to Mrs. Fiske, as a present from her husband.

Patrick Dowdle, a resident of Washington street, owns a very sagacious dog. The animal is a handsome Newfoundland and his feats in water are astonishing. Dogs of this species are fond of water, but this one goes ahead of anything we ever saw. His owner flung a large stone into about ten feet of water, and sent the dog after it. The canine swam out until he got within the ripple and then dove, bringing up the identical stone. Beat this if you can.

Upwards of twenty experienced High School teachers applied for the position made vacant by Mr. Ham's resignation. This is remarkable considering the short notice, and the fact that no call was made for candidates. They were nearly all capable men, of superior attainments, and the Committee would have felt warranted in appointing almost any one of them. The exceptional qualifications and experience of Professor Bergen secured his election on the second ballot.

There are two patches of potatoes at the head of Mount Vernon street, and last Saturday the potato bugs for some reason left them in one grand rush, and the road and side walk in the vicinity was one mass, as you might say, of potato bugs. A pedestrian could not step without stepping on dozens of them, and a team passing through the street, would kill hundreds of them. How long this grand stampede continued we don't know, but quite a number witnessed it.

Up on Central street they are laughing at a party who was born and always lived in that part of the town, who recently wandered so far from that noted locality as to bring up at Highland Park and losing his way was obliged to enquire where he was and how to reach home. Well, there have been a lot of changes in that locality, and when he came in contact with the perpendicular wall of Mr. John Enos' house, no wonder he thought he was in the metropolis.

THOSE WHO USE IT, SAY

I have carefully examined the People's Cyclopedia, and am heartily ready to endorse the same as a work of great value, I am the owner of the Encyclopedia Britannica, and yet do not hesitate to say that the People's Cyclopedia, in many features, is superior, while the cost is far less. I know of no Cyclopedia so fully in the reach of all classes and yet so wonderfully adapted to their needs. W P. CHIPMAN, Pastor of the Baptist Church, Peabody, Mass.

I have examined the People's Cyclopedia and consider it worthy the attention of any one desiring an excellent book of reference. The very moderate cost of the work is especially to be noted. G. FRED OSGOOD,

The People's Cyclopedia, sold by Mr. A. E. Cady, agent, I regard a work of rare merit. Its range of subjects and comprehensive of treatment is all that can be desired. It fills a place no other Cyclopedia has done. Its completeness at so small a cost is a very strong recommendation which cannot fail to be appreciated. CHAS. W. SMITH, Pastor of Washington St., M. E. Church, Peabody, Mass.

Before examining The People's Cyclopedia, I could not conceive how so good a work could be made. I can not now imagine how a better one can be made. S. W. MASON, LL. D., Supervisor Schools, Boston.

I deem it an admirable work. It covers the field of knowledge effectively, and gives just that information which all want. In short, it is just the book for reading, thinking Americans. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Brooklyn.

When I had finished a careful examination of The People's Cyclopedia, I decided to purchase it, although I already possessed the Britannica, American and Johnson's Universal. Each of these great works has merits peculiarly its own, but it may, in my judgment, be truly said of The People's, that it furnishes more information for the money than any work extant. Col. JOHN D. WASHBURN, Worcester, Mass.

I am especially pleased with its freshness and accuracy, its brevity and clearness of statement, and at the same time its fulness and completeness, making it, in my opinion, the most convenient and usable of all Cyclopedias before the public. N. A. LUCE, State Supt. of Schools, Maine.

TIRED ALL OVER.

WHAT RESTED AND REFRESHED A WEARY MAN IN MEMPHIS.

"No, it never amounted to an acute pain, but continued to be a dull weary ache in the small of my back," writes Mr. Jas. Thomas, of No. 59 Madison street, Memphis, Tenn. "This was an old experience, and life became dull music. I was tired all over, with pain in the lower limbs, and a habit of lying awake nights. Recently I tried one of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS and was decidedly relieved within twenty-four hours. It may have been Providence that did the work, but I give the credit to Benson's porous plaster." Mr. Thomas' reverential idea does him credit, but Providence works by agents, and among them Benson's plaster ranks first as an external remedy. It acts quickly in relief and healing, and renders life better worth living. Price 25 cents. Look in the middle of the plaster for the word CAPCINE. Ask your physician about it. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Brother Gardner on Charity.

"I hold heah in my han," began Brother Gardner, as the triangle sounded and Samual Shin laid aside the harmonica. "I hold heah a letter from one ob de charitable societies of Detroit axin' if dis club kin be depended on to aid in the good work dis winter. In sartin cases dis club kin be depended on fur a ton of coal, a cord of wood or a bar'l of flour, or a ten-dollar bill. In sartin oder cases dis club won't come down with as much as a shingle nail. Public charity in dis kentry am a curious thing.

It insists dat every man shall airn his own libin,' an' den it turns in and supports de class who will sooner starve dan work.

It am de enemy of whiskey, an' yet as soon as whiskey makes a pauper it supports him.

It flatters de man who gits a few dollars ahead, an' yet demands a sheer of dat money to aid de idle an' dissipated.

Public charity comes as near bein' a bold-faced fraud as any sentiment you kin name. It encourages laziness by providing fur de lazy. It encourages drunkenness by providing fur de families ob drunkards. It encourages immorality by providin' homes an' hospitals for de immoral. It encourages de spendthrift by feedin' an' clothin' him all winter after he has squandered his money all summer. Public charity am a wall agin which de reckless, de lazy, de shiftless an' dissolute lean when all oder props gib way.

Simmer it down, an' public charity means takin' money which a man has saved by hard work an' economy an' usin' it to support de man who has squandered time and money without a car' as to what becomes ob him. It am a blackmail on industry—it am a slap at economy—it am a kick at industry. How does it come dat wid dis country constantly growin' in wealth, and constantly furnishing increased chances fur poo' men to get along, dat pauperism am also increasin'? Eight-tenths of de saloons in America am supported by men whose families need ebery cent dey airn fur clothin' an' bread, an' who rely on public charity in case of a hard winter. De kentry has five times as many paupers as it had fifteen y'ars ago! Why? Kase we raise five times as much money to support 'em. Double de amount of the poo' fund an' you will double de number of paupers.

An' now let me ask you a plain queshun. If I work hard, week in and week out—if my wife works hard an' economizes—if we patch, darn, dye an' cut ober—if we buy cheap tea an' coffee an' pare de 'taters close, an' manage to pay for a little home, and put money in de bank fur sickness and death, has any human being a right to ask us to give our penny to a man who has thrown away scores of dollars for beer an' tobacco—who plays keerds an' shakes dice fur money—who works only when he feels like it—who neber dreams of economy—who neber practices self-denial? I reckon not! Let us now turn our faces towards the rowteen of bizness."—Free Press.

For twenty-five years I have been severely afflicted with Hay Fever. While I was suffering intensely I was induced through Mr. Tichenor's testimonial, to try Ely's Cream Balm. The effect was marvellous. It enabled me to perform my pastoral duties without the slighest inconvenience, and I have escaped a return attack. I pronounce Ely's Cream Balm a cure for Hay Fever. Wm. T. Carr, Presbyterian Pastor, Elizabeth, N. Jersey.

I can recommend Ely's Cream Balm to all Hay Fever sufferers, it being, in my opinion founded on experience, a sure cure. I was afflicted with Hay Fever for twenty-five years, and never before found permanent relief. Webster H. Haskins, Marshfield, Vt.

Morrison's knitting yarn is the best yarn in the market. Peabody has it in all colors.

The July and August numbers of Browne's Phonographic Monthly have been received, and are filled with unusually interesting matter. Several pages of Browne's Business Book of Letters are given. This book contains specimens of all kinds of letters met with in different businesses by the amanuensis. It is invaluable to the shorthand student. There are interesting letters from prominent stenographers in this country and in Europe concerning the art, and everything combines to make them the most interesting numbers yet received. The price is $2 a year, or 20c. a single copy. D. L. Scott-Browne, Publisher.

Opinion of Dr. Mott, late Government Chemist, on Allcock's Porous Plaster.

My investigation of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER shows it to contain valuable and essential ingredients not found in any other plaster. These ingredients are so perfectly proportioned that the Allcock's Porous Plaster will not cause blisters or excessive irritation, and I find it superior to and more efficient than any other plaster. HENRY A. MOTT, Jr., Ph.D., F.C.S., Prof. of Chemistry, N. Y. Medical College, etc. No. 61 Broadway, New York, May 23, 1883. aug 8—4t

THAT DOUGHTY DUCHESS.

OPPOSITE OPINIONS ABOUT A WONDERFUL WOMAN—HER THUMB AND FINGERS.

"Crack nuts with her fingers? Why, you can't mean it!" cried a young lady graduate of the Normal College, in the utmost astonishment.

"But I do mean it," affirmed her big brother, who had taken several prizes in athletics, "and I re-assert it: that Cymburga, wife of Duke Ernest, of Austria, could crack nuts with her fingers and drive nails into the wall with her thumb."

"What a monstrous woman!" said the young lady. "What a useful woman," amended her big brother.

The Austrian Duchess was mighty becanse she kept good hours, good habits and perfect digestion.

Mrs. Alice Strong, of Pittsburg, Pa., writes a different story about herself, but deserves praise for her frankness. She says: "For the past three years I have been subject to severe attacks of colic and cramps, and exhausting attacks of Diarrhœa. Weary of experimenting with medicines, I turned, without hope, to PARKER'S GINGER TONIC. Three bottles cured me entirely. I have tried it also for other ailments with which women are often afflicted, and it far surpassed my expectations. I am happy to offer this testimony for the benefit of other women."

Ladies who are interested in Mrs Strong's letter, will please remark that PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of ginger. It cures colic easily, but by virtue of other rare and powerful ingredients, it also masters all diseases of the Blood—such, for example, as Rheumatism, Consumption, Scrotula, and all disorders of the Kidneys, Liver and Stomach. It is a vitalizer and stimulant, but not an intoxicant. Prices, 50 cents and $1 per bottle. Hiscox & Co., Chemists, New York.

A MATHEMATICAL CURIOSITY.—A New and Ingenious Method of Squaring Numbers: A freshman at Williams college has invented a new method of squaring numbers, which, though wonderfully ingenious, is of little practical use except that for some persons in may be sometimes easier in the case of very large numbers. It is worth preserving, however, as one of the curiosities of Mathematics, and it is a matter of much wonder through what processes of mind it could have been discovered. Here is the rule:

Beginning at the left, multiply the double of each digit of the given number by the number represented by the preceding digits, and write each product under those already obtained, in such a way that its right hand figure shall be two places to the right of the right hand figure of the preceding product. Then square each digit successively, beginning at the right, and place the right hand figure of the first result one place to the right of the right-hand figure of the last product before obtained, and the right-hand figure of each succeeding square two places to the left of the right-hand figure of the preceding square. Add the columns together and the result will be the required square.

The process is simpler than would seem at first from the terms of the rule, which are somewhat involved from the number of words required to make it clear. An example will show how it works. Suppose it is required to square the number 2345. There are no digits preceding 2. Doubling 3 we have 6 and the product by 2, the preceding digit, is 12. Then 8 times 23 are 184, which we can write under the 12 according to rule, as seen below. The third step gives 2340, and then the process of squaring the digits produces 25, 16, 9 and 4, which are written as in the example, and we have the following demonstration:

2340
25
16

5499025

The result is easily verified by the following multiplication in the ordinary "full" form:

2345
2345

11725
9380
7035

5499025

Few more curious results of mathematical study into the relations of numbers in simple operations have ever been published, and it may well puzzle the best of arithmeticians to explain the reasons of the process.

A VEXED CLERGYMAN.

Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and endeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet, how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial Bottles given away at Hazen A. Spaulding's Drug Store.

PLAIN WORDS

ARE BEST TO EXPRESS THE SUFFERING SO LONG ENDURED BY A MOST EXCELLENT LADY, MRS. G. FISHER, 29 CLARK ST., NEW HAVEN, CONN. HER KIND AND GRATEFUL EXPRESSION TOWARDS THE MEANS THAT AFFORDED RELIEF.

Facts clothed in plain words are best. Mrs. George Fisher lives in a pleasant cottage at 29 Clark St., New Haven, Conn. She says: "I was a terrible sufferer from Liver disease for a period of twelve years. My family physician told me that it was chronic inflammation of the Liver. I tried a great many remedies recommended for liver difficulties. I was under the physicians' care a great deal, but could get no relief, until I began taking Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. I experienced relief at once, and to-day I'm enjoying good health through the use of this. I had also been a great sufferer from rheumatism in my limbs and shoulders, but I have been cured entirely through the use of FAVORITE REMEDY. I consider Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY a most excellent medicine. I know of many in this city who have received great benefit from the use of FAVORITE REMEDY. It is, sir, a good medicine. I know it, for I've tried it."

Mrs. Fisher is a lady of character and means what she says.

Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your Liver disordered? Have you derangement of the Kidneys or Bladder associated with Constipation of the Bowels? If so, you want Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Dr. Kennedy practices medicine and surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. Address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Book Notices.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for September has several articles of interest. Under the title of "An Episode of John Brown's Raid," Col. A. K. Mc Clure gives an account of Capt. Cook, whose counsel he was, and brings to light many interesting particulars. "Five Graves in Montana," by S. B. Griffin, editor of the Springfield Republican, traces the history of a notorious gang of "road agents," and the bold and stringent measures by which life and property were made secure in the Territory before it had been legally organized. Other articles are, "Our Summer Court in Schoharie," by P. Deming, and "The Metropolis of the Farm," by Edward C. Bruce. "The Jewel in the Lotos," which is illustrated with a beautiful frontispiece, maintains its interest; and the short stories are varied and entertaining. There are, as usual, several good things in the, "Monthly Gossip." Lippincott's is always emphatically readable.

The September Number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly presents a host of bright attractions, of which we can name only a few. "The Treaty of Paris, September, 1783," "The French Stage," "The Tea Commerce of New York," and Nell Gwynn," are the prominent articles, each profusely illustrated. The exciting serial, "The Beautiful Countess of Clairville," is continued, and a new one commenced, "True to Untruth," and there are short stories, sketches, adventures, etc. by popular writers, together with poems of unusual merit. There are 128 quarto pages, and over 100 embellishments in each number, together with a beautiful colored plate frontispiece. Price, 25 cents; $3 a year, postpaid.

Address Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55, and 57 Park Place, New York.

THE COTTAGE HEARTH is a Monthly Magazine edited by D. L. Milliken and published in Boston, at $1.50 a year or 15 cents a single number. The September contents are: Frontispiece, Summer Day: Unto the Hills, with 5 illustrations; The Line Gale; Afterglow, poem; Mutiny of the Quadrille, illustrated; Selected Poetry; Use of Language; Hints on Potting Plants; Aquarium illustrated; Sabbath Thoughts; Music; Bagatelle; My Memories; Health and Temperance; The Primal Pair, Poetry; That Eccentric Stickney; Household Hints; Approved Receipts; The Needle; Ladies' Fancy Work, illustrated; The Fashions, illustrated; Weighed and Wanting; Editor's Basket.

We are in receipt of a copy of War Songs, recently published by Oliver Ditson & Co., which will commend itself not only for gatherings of the war veterans and for anniversaries, but to those who desire to keep in memory the songs which were made popular during these troublous times. There is Root's "Battle Cry of Freedom," "Just before the Battle," Tenting To-night," "Marching through Georgia," "John Brown's Body," besides hosts of others sung by the boys. There are also the older patriotic tunes, and altogether the collection will be much sought after.

"Bread Winners," the annonymous story in the Century which is attracting so much attention, has the second part in this month's issue, and reveals its motives as a satire on labor unions or socialisms. There is also an illustrated paper on "Cape Cod" by F. Mitchell, and is based on much original research. It will be carefully read. There is also a continuation of "A Woman's Reason" and other stories, besides topics of the time, open letters, miscellany, completing a valuable number.

The September number of St. Nicholas is a breezy autumn number, and will be welcomed by the many young readers of the magazine. Louisa M. Alcott contributes a charming story. Mr. Daniel Beard tells of his young friends in Florida. There is an illustrated article on the "Playthings and Amusements of an Old-fashioned Boy;" a story by J. T. Trowbridge, and lots of interesting and entertaining matter. Enquire for St. Nicholas of the Peabody News Co.

We to-day received from J. H. Zeilin & Co., Philadelphia,—the proprietors of the popular remedies, Simmons Liver Regulator and Darby's Prophylactic Fluid,—a copy of "The Peoples' Regulator," a pocket companion useful to everybody—man, woman and child, and we hope all our readers will get a copy, as they will find it valuable in many ways. They mail it to anyone sending them their address.

BIEBER, CAL.—Mr. Thomas P. Ford, editor of the Mountain Tribune, of this place, publishes that the great pain-cure, St. Jacobs Oil, has worked wonders in his family, and that he would not be without it. He states that among all the people, St. Jacobs Oil is the most popular medicine ever introduced.

Hon. Charles P. Thompson is announced to preside over the Democratic convention at Springfield, on Sept. 26, and to deliver the agricultural address at Salem on the same day. This affords brother Thompson a better excuse for keeping out of bad company than he usually gets.—Salem Gazette.

Damonia, the new remedy advertised in our columns, is a magnetic mineral earth lately discovered in Texas, which a careful analysis of our most prominent chemists declares to contain the most potent medical ingredients. A trial is recommended.

Miscellaneous.

CHARACTER IN SMOKING.

Said a cigar dealer: It is twenty years now since I began to sell tobacco, and in that time I have closely studied the character of my patrons, forming my conclusions from the kind of company they keep. I mean by the kind of cigars they smoke. I can always tell. An even-tempered, quiet fellow, never goes to an extreme in choosing a tobacco. Then there is a great deal in the way men handle their cigars. Few can smoke on one side as well as on the other. Men come in here every day who have been smoking for years, and if they were to place a cigar on the wrong side of the mouth they would appear as clumsy and green as a boy who was trying his first weed. The muscles of the face become set to one position. Any change requires a reorganization of the face. So it isn't by the way a cigar is embraced in the mouth that you can estimate a man.

If a man smokes his cigar only enough to keep it lighted, and relishes taking it from between his lips to cast a whirling curl of blue smoke into the air, set him down as an easy-going fellow, who cares little for how the world goes, and no more for himself. He has keen perceptions and delicate sensibilities. He will not create trouble, but is apt to see it out when it is once begun.

Beware of the man who never releases the cigar from the grip of his teeth, and is indifferent of whether it burns or dies. He is cool, calculating and exacting. He is seldom energetic physically, but he lives easily off those who perform the labor.

A man who smokes a bit, rests a bit, and fumbles the cigar more or less, is apt to be easily affected by circumstances. He may be energetic, careful, generous and courageous, but he is vacillating and liable to change on a moment's notice.

If the cigar goes out frequently the man has a whole-soul disposition, is a devil-may-care sort of a fellow, with a lively brain, a glib tongue, and generally a fine fund of anecdotes and yarns.

To hold half the cigar in the mouth and smoke indifferently is a lazy man's habit. They are generally of little force and their characters are not of the higher strata.

A nervous man, or one under exciting influences, fumbles his cigar a great deal. He is a kind of popinjay among men.

Holding the cigar constantly between the teeth, chewing it occasionally, and not caring whether or not it is lighted at all, are characteristics of men with the tenacity of bull-dogs. They never forget anything and never release a hold.

A fop stands his cigar on end, and an inexperienced smoker either points it straight ahead or almost at right angles with his course.

A SERIOUS QUESTION.

The abuse of witnesses is a subject which should command universal attention. There is probably no evil connected with the administration of the law which calls more loudly for redress. Says a contemporary: "Men who are innocent of any fault but that of having been involuntary spectators of other men's crimes, or disputed transactions, are dragged into court against their will, either to secure the punishment of a criminal, or perhaps more frequently, to give testimony in a civil case. It would be natural to suppose that one who had thus been compelled, at considerable personal inconvenience, to attend a duty so onerous, would be treated with at least ordinary civility and respect. But this is not generally the case. After being sworn to tell the truth, he is beset by several sharp practitioners who have made this business a study; and who use the most despotic efforts to befog his intellect, to confound his ideas, to perplex his memory, and, if possible, to betray him into unintentional error. If in such hands he becomes so worried as to utter seeming contradictions, he is lashed without mercy as a perjurer. Or if, after spending all their impudence upon him—after browbeating and torturing him to their hearts' content—the lawyers are unable to puzzle him, and he still adheres to his simple story, mark the seeming malignity with which he is assailed in the advocate's argument. How his motives are impeached, his character criticised or blackened, his most sacred feelings ridiculed, until he seems a monster too vile to be believed! We have known some estimable men of sensitive minds who have not recovered for weeks from attack of this sort, made by a skilful speaker, without a shadow of excuse for it, save in his anxiety to sustain a sinking cause."

THE PHOTOGRAPHIC CAMERA.

Although the photographic camera has been aptly described as "a retina which never forgets," and although we know that the image it produces is true as to form, it is within the experience of everybody that photographic portraits are not always good likenesses. We are inclined to attribute this failing to the circumstance that by photography it has hitherto been found impossible to give colors their true shade-value, if we may invent a term to serve our purpose. What we mean is this; yellow to the eye is a brilliant light tint; but in a photograph it is reproduced almost black. Red, instead of giving the idea of fire and light, comes out black. Blue, photographs perfectly white. Such changes, of course, play sad havoc with complexions and contrasts of color generally, and persons with hair and skin exhibiting exceptional brilliancy of coloring are quite justified in remarking: "I never make a good photograph." According to a note brought before the Photographic Society of France recently, this stigma upon photographic portraiture is not to remain. By the addition to the usual ingredients of the sensitive photographic surface of one per cent. of eosine, the difficulties which we have described can be altogether obviated.

FIRE DEPARTMENT NOTES.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H. Aug. 28, '83.

The Abel Proctor H. & L. No. 1, with thirteen men and drummers, with the Eagle Hose No. 1 under escort, left Peabody at 7.30 A. M. for Portsmouth, arriving at about 10 o'clock. They were met at the depot by a committee of the Portsmouth department, with the North Berwick Cornet Band, and escorted to the quarters of Kearsarge S. F. E. No. 3, where a bountiful collation was served, to which the boys gave the closest attention, after which they were marched to their quarters. The Trucks are quartered at the Central House on State street, and the Hose boys at the Granite House, directly opposite. After dinner the boys broke up into squads to see the sights around town. They visited the U. S. Navy Yard at Kittery, and were shown all the places of interest, including the old frigate Constitution, which lies at the yard. The Constitution is being fitted for a receiving ship, and was examined pretty thoroughly by the firemen. In going over her they discovered the date of her build, which is 1797. They also went aboard the Albatross, the boat used by the U. S. Fish Commission, and were shown the workings of the machinery used in deep sea dragging. After leaving the Navy Yard the boys crossed into Kittery town, but the Maine Law was so stringent that they did not make a long stop, but took the steamer for Portsmouth and the Sham Fight, which was rightly named, as the fighting was done with two pieces of artillery and about fifty men, all on one side. Pierce's Island where the sham fight was, and where the Clam Bake is to be held, is reached from the main land, by a pontoon bridge, and to-day is filled with wheels of fortune, three card monte men and other sharpers, and they seem to be doing a thriving business.

The Portsmouth firemen are doing all in their power to make things pleasant for the visiting "laddies."

Police arrangements are excellent, the local force being assisted by a detachment of six men from Boston under the charge of a sergeant. Have seen no drunkenness as yet.

The reason the Sham fight did not take place is that the fleet did not arrive, the only one getting in being the U. S. Training Ship, Portsmouth, which got in about four o'clock P. M.

It would be hard to estimate the number of firemen in the city, as they are scattered all over the city, but to-morrow will tell the story.

Neither the Salem or Marblehead companies have arrived as yet, but are coming down Wednesday morning.

The Peabody boys attracted much attention on their arrival by their neat and orderly appearance.

The "boys" were reviewed by Mayor Treat this morning. ZERO.

The engineers held a meeting on Wednesday evening, and voted to rebuild the old Eagle carriage. The contract was given to Messrs. Bowditch & Cogswell of Boston, they being the lowest bidders.

Assistant Foreman John A. Hart of Steamer No. 1, is spending his vacation in the vicinity of Ipswich.

Quite a number of the Peabody firemen were present at the fire on Front street, Salem, last Wednesday afternoon. The alarm was plainly heard in this town.

H. & L. No. 1, have got about twenty of their old members to take charge of the truck, while they are away at Portsmouth. They are under the command of Assistant Foreman Wilson of the regular company.

Ezra H. Shannon of Steamer No. 2, is spending a few days in Concord, N. H. He will combine business with pleasure during his trip.

The "Truck" company are quartered at the Central House in Portsmouth.

The fire in Buffum's mill in Salem has brought up recollections among some of our old ex-firemen, of the great fire in Front street, Dec. 18, 1844. The Volunteer hand engine was then new and was the only side stroke engine in this vicinity, and was an object of much curiosity, and a lot of fun was made of her. Among other names applied, was the "old hay cart," but after she got to work at that fire and pumped the water out of a reservoir, said to hold water enough to last an end stroke machine twenty-four hours, in less than half of that time, the tune was changed, and whenever she appeared at a fire in Salem after that they were located for good service. The engine worked over fifteen hours at that fire.

Mr. Isaac Andrews, one of the Selectmen of Swampscott was the guest of Mr. Henry P. Dorsett of this town last Sunday. He is considerably interested in fire matters, having recently purchased a steamer for that town. He visited our brick engine house and expressed himself well pleased. ZERO.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Mr. Edward E. Taylor and wife spent three days last week at Alton Bay, N.H.

Mr. John Newhall says that he would like to have the party who stole his plants last Thursday night invite him to see them when they blossom next winter.

Several boat houses have been built at Spring pond during the past season. It is not uncommon to see a number of men fishing on the pond and their wives lounging about on the shore.

Extensive improvements are being made at the Lynnfield Hotel this week. A new piazza is being placed around the house; it will be opened to the public on September the 15th.

Scott Brothers, owners of the Raddin ledge at So. Peabody, will build the foundation of a large brick depot on the Concord railroad.

A short time ago a party was driving a lot of cattle through West Peabody and some of them got into a bad place near the road, and were rescued with great difficulty. The owner has presented a bill to the town for damages.

HISTORY OF TEMPERANCE REFORM IN PEABODY.

ITS EARLY ORIGINATORS.

SCENES AND INCIDENTS.

BY MRS. M. O. STEVENS.

The history of an opinion which in its growth and progress covers a period of seventy years can not be unimportant or uninteresting. When that opinion is not merely a sentiment, but is a vital question touching the well-being, highest happiness and fullest development of every individual, besides being a pivotal point for political economy, sociology, good government, the advancement of humanity, and the purest ideal of Christianity to rest upon, it becomes of great importance to review and consider this growth as it has made its advancement step by step through the years.

The history of our race can hardly show the uprising of an opinion which equals in general importance the doubt that alcoholic beverages are of benefit to the world. It touches not alone one class of people or one section of country, but all classes and every section of all countries. It is the propounding of a great vital question which every man's conscience and experience must in some way help to solve whether he will or no. It is only another form of that mighty warfare of the soul with the body of man, which once begun back in the distant ages, will go on until the spiritual part shall become supreme.

A history of the commencement and spread of a temperance opinion in this town is worthy of recital and consideration. As a private opinion, the loftiest principle, divine law though it be, in the eyes of the world is a weak thing, but when it becomes the opinion of many men, defended, cherished and exemplified through a long, clear cut path of life, it merges into public opinion, which is "almost omnipotent." The intention is to make this recital wholly the progress of an idea and not a history of individuals. Men's names will enter into it. The story could not be otherwise told. As instruments, consistent or inconsistent in their time and place, they become a part of the history and are woven into its mesh, giving light or shade as the case may be. It may be imagined that some of the stringent provisions and inhibitions of the ancient license laws of Massachusetts colony were enforced in this town, when a part of Salem, and afterwards in its new relation as the South parish of the town of Danvers.

On May 28, 1813, sufficient persons got together in Boston to elect members to the Massachusetts Society for the Suppression of Intemperance. Samuel Worcester, Abel Abbot and Joshua Huntington were empowered as a committee to notify by circular these elected members of the assistance asked of them in an attempt to suppress the alarming vice of intemperance. The circular bore date of June 11, 1813, and was received by many citizens of known standing and high character in the town of Danvers. The letter which Capt. Samuel Page, of the New Mills village, wrote on Aug. 3, of that same year, accepting the membership to which he was invited, is still extant. Immediately he and other gentlemen of the town took steps to form a local branch of the state society. It bore the name of "The Danvers Auxiliary Society," with the object of "suppressing intemperance and other vices, and for promoting temperance and general morality." It came into existence on March 15, 1814, with twenty members who were as follows: Samuel Holten, Benj. Wadsworth, Jona. Ingerson, Joseph Poor, Samuel Walker, Squires Shove, Ward Pool, Andrew Nichols, Fitch Pool, Benj. Kimball, Jos. Torrey, Eleazar Putnam, Samuel Page, John Endicott, Samuel Fowler, Jona. Shillaber, Caleb Oakes, Nathan Endicott, Wm. P. Page, Israel Endicott. The constitution contained three pledges as follows:—

Art. 9. The members of this society agree that they will not furnish to the men they employ to labor a daily allowance of ardent spirit, nor give it except in cases of particular necessity.

Art. 10. The members of this society agree that they will endeavor to exert a prudent influence in checking intemperance and its kindred vices, particularly by promoting the execution of the good and wholesome laws of the Commonwealth on this subject.

Art. 11. The members of this Society agree that they will exert all of their influence to effect a change in the fashion of entertaining friends and visitors, and for ardent spirits will emulate each other in presenting mild and safe substitutes.

The handwriting of the constitution of this pioneer temperance society would indicate that it was drawn up by its first President, Judge Samuel Holten. The other officers of the first board were, viz.: Vice Presidents, Rev. Benjamin Wadsworth and Rev. Samuel Walker; Recording Secretary, Dr. Joseph Torrey; Corresponding Secretary, Dr. Andrew Nichols; Treasurer, Fitch Pool; Counsellors, Eleazar Putnam, Samuel Page, John Endicott, Sylvester Osborne, Joseph Osborne, James Brown, William Sutton and Nathan Felton. The five names in the board of counsellors not in the original membership were probably added at the first annual meeting which on the year of the Society's birth was held on April 26. None of these twenty-five gentlemen, whose names have power to call up a long train of recollections in the minds of our older citizens, are now alive. On June 29, 1815, Rev. Benj. Wadsworth delivered an address before the Society in his own church which is now Rev. Mr. Rice's, at Danvers Centre. At this annual meeting a committee of five were chosen to confer with "the retailers and taverners" respecting the regulating according to law of their shops and houses. Twelve men and two women were reported as intemperate. The Laws of Mass. Act of February 28, 1787 had this provision:

The Selectmen of each town are to post in licensed houses and shops, "the names of all persons reputed to be common drunkards," and also to give notice of any person who by excessive drinking should expose himself or family to want, or "greatly injure his health;" and until such persons "have reformed" it is made penal to sell to them.

This list of common drunkards was prepared for the Selectmen to "post." The annual meeting of 1816 was a failure because of insufficient numbers. The death of Judge Holten, the president, occurred about this time. The address at the fourth annual meeting was delivered by Rev. Samuel Walker, pastor of the South Church, on April 29, 1817, which was the annual Fast Day. Rev. Benj. Wadsworth was elected president of the society this year, which office he filled for ten years and made a good record as an advocate of temperance. On April 28, 1818, the address was delivered by Rev. Jeremiah Chaplin, D. D., the able pastor of the New Mills Baptist Church. This was the last year of his pastorate at that place. This year the list of intemperate men and women reported for posting numbered forty-seven. Seventeen of them were no longer living seven years later. The address at the South Church on April 27, 1819, was by Dr. Andrew Nichols. On April 25, 1820, it was delivered by Dr. George Osgood in the North Church. On Jan. 30, 1821, it was thought proper to send a committee to confer with the selectmen in reference to some illegal selling that was being carried on in town. On Fast Day of that year John W. Proctor, Esq., was the orator at the South Meeting House. The committee chosen three months before to wait upon the selectmen was increased to the number of ten. July 31, a partial report was made at a quarterly meeting where they were directed "to persevere in the duties of their appointment." The ninth annual gathering was at the New Mills Baptist Church on April 30, 1822, when Dr. Warren Abbott made the address. That of 1823 was on Fast Day, April 29, at the brick meeting house, also called the North Church, when Rev. Arthur Drinkwater, the New Mills Baptist clergyman, delivered the address. On May 19, 1824, Rufus Choate, Esq., was the orator in the South Church.

During the next year important changes were made in the society. When the twelfth annual was held on May 11, 1825, in Rev. Mr. Drinkwater's Church, the constitution which had been revised was adopted. The cognomen of the organization became "The Danvers Moral Society." The pledge was rewritten as follows:—

Art. 12. "The members of this society, being fully convinced that the daily use of ardent spirits is unnecessary and prejudicial to health, do agree to exert their influence to counteract this practice, and to diminish the consumption of an article, from which so much evil originates, as far as in their power."

Art. 13. "The members of this society do agree to exert their influence on all proper occasions in support of the salutary laws of this Commonwealth relative to the suppression of intemperance."

J. W. Proctor, Esq., was elected corresponding secretary, and Rufus Choate, Esq., recording secretary. William Oakes gave the address which was reported as "ingenious." On April 25, 1826, the society met in Rev. Mr. Braman's Church, elected Rev. Samuel Walker president, and listened to an address by Rev. Mr. Poor. Parson Walker died during the year and on April 5, 1827, Rev. Arthur Drinkwater was elected president. The meeting was in the South Church and the strong "total abstinence" address of Dr. Ebenezer Hunt created much excitement. He made a comparison of the mortality in two classes in society in this wise: "From 1816 to 1826 one-half, or thirty common tipplers have died; but twenty deaths have occurred in thirteen years among the one hundred and twenty members of this society. Five of these had passed three score and ten. The intemperate part in ten years are as one to two, while among the temperate in thirteen years it has been as one to six, and deducting the five who died in old age, it is as one to eight." At the adjourned town meeting held in the North Parish on May 7, a motion made by Caleb Oakes was passed to choose a committee of nine persons in behalf of the town to see that laws regulating the sale of ardent spirits be complied with and to report any violation. On the fifteenth annual Rev. C. C. Sewall, pastor of the Unitarian Church in this portion of the town gave the address. A report was made that the Selectmen had neglected to post the list of intemperate persons. On April 9, 1829, Rev. Geo. Cowles delivered the address in Rev. Mr. Drinkwater's church. Edward Southwick, Jr., was elected secretary. At a quarterly meeting on Oct. 27, of this year a committee was chosen to inquire into the laws and how far dealers failed to conform to the same. This query seems to have been contagious; it was permeating all parts of the commonwealth.

The first temperance society was simply advocating "moderation." Its members were scouted by the world at large as "fanatics," though they warred not upon the use of intoxicants but only condemned their abuse. As we read its record it seems as if the whole force of its batteries was aimed at the unfortunate victims of appetite, and after society and existing custom had made them drunkards the "moral society" branded them. The Rev. Dr. Marsh declares, that "the society"—the state one—"did little beyond observing its anniversary, by the preaching of a sermon, after which preacher and hearers would repair to tables richly laden with wine. It was therefore without efficacy in rooting out the evil."

On the tenth of January, 1826, Dr. Justin Edwards, the president of the Andover school, gathered together a few friends in Boston to consider the question, "What shall be done to banish the enemy from the United States?" On this day the "American Temperance Society" was formed whose pledge was total abstinence from ardent spirits. Hon. Marcus Morton was president; Hon. Samuel Hubbard, vice president; William Ropes, Esq., treasurer; and John Tappan, Esq., auditor. The society immediately raised eight thousand dollars in Boston and vicinity to put an agent in the field. Rev. Dr. Nathaniel Hewitt, of Bridgeport, Conn., was this first professional temperance advocate, and was instrumental in organizing 222 branch societies and gaining 30,000 signers to the total abstinence pledge during the year 1826, in the New England and Middle States. It is probable that he came to the town of Danvers and spoke in the portion of it which is now Peabody, in 1826 Messrs. Peirce & Sanger who carried on an immense West India goods and grocery business at the stand now occupied by O. F. Batchelder & Sons were easily led to see the harm of their business. The reading of "The National Philanthropist," the first distinctive temperance newspaper in the world, which was published in Boston by Rev. William Collier, completed the work begun by Dr. Hewitt, and Mr. Abner Sanger and John B. Pierce—the latter gentleman is still alive at a ripe old age—discontinued the traffic in intoxicating beverages. The work of "the old temperance movement," as it is called, flourished amazingly in this town as it did in all parts of the country. At the beginning of 1833 it was estimated that through the efforts of the American Temperance Society, organized by the agency of Dr. Edwards, "there were more than five thousand temperance societies in the United States, with a membership of a million and a quarter, of whom ten thousand had been drunkards. Four thousand distilleries had been stopped, six thousand merchants had given up the sale of ardent spirits, and their use had been abandoned on over four thousand vessels."

The laws of 1787 which gave legal sanction to the sale of intoxicants were being scrutinized about this time. Accordingly on Jan. 26, 1830, "The Danvers Moral Society" chose Edward Southwick, Jr., J. W. Proctor, Esq., Dr. Andrew Nichols, Eleazar Putnam and Dr. Ebenezer Hunt, a committee to memoralize the legislature to alter existing laws concerning licenses, and to urge the national and state societies to aid them in this work. There was a system which has been styled "the double imposition of hands, to set apart a person for the business of liquor selling." That is, "the licenses were granted by the County Court of General Sessions upon the recommendation of the selectmen of the applicant's town." The result of the appeals to the legislature at this time was the passage of the Act of March 19, 1831, that required the Selectmen to be sworn "faithfully and impartially, without fear, favor, or hope of reward, to discharge the duties of their office respecting all licenses, and respecting all recommendations," and that the certificate given should set forth that the public good requires that the license be granted; and the act of the next year that put the County Commissioners in the place of the Court of Sessions.

At the seventeenth annual which was intended to be held on Fast Day, 1830, Rev. Dr Braman was to have delivered the address but his illness prevented, and the meeting did not occur until Sept. 13, in the South Church, when Rev. Hozea Hildreth of Gloucester, spoke on "The connection between temperance and general habits of economy." Rev. C. C. Sewall, pastor of the Unitarian Church, was this year elected president of the society. On April 8, 1831, Rev. Milton P. Braman, D. D., delivered the address in his own church. A list of fifty-six intemperate persons were made out for the selectmen to "post." Six were reported as wasting their substance by intemperate habits, and the selectmen were requested to place them under guardianship. It is believed that this request was carried out by the town officers. An adjourned meeting was held soon after when Messrs. Abner Sanger, Samuel P. Fowler and Samuel Preston were made a committee to ascertain how much ardent spirit was annually sold, and how large a proportion was sold to inhabitants. The settlers of all the surrounding country for miles at that time came to this village to trade. At a meeting of the town held June 8, it was voted: That the Overseers of the Poor be instructed not to permit the use of ardent spirits at the Alms house, to be furnished at the expense of the town, except in particular cases approved by the attending physician, and the quantity of and times of using of it to be prescribed by said physician; and that the clerk furnish the Chairman of Overseers with a copy of the preceding vote. Some years after this vote was passed more restrictive orders were given the Overseers with the result of having a "rum riot" at the alms house. An attempt was made to refrain from supplying tobacco to the inmates, but the kindly feelings of the Overseers prevented this deprivation. On July 26, at another adjourned meeting a committee of five was chosen to hold meetings frequently in all the school districts and enlighten the people on this question. April 5, 1832, Rev. James Barnaby delivered the address at the New Mills Baptist Church. Rev. Geo. Cowles, the pastor of the Congregational church in this parish, was elected president. A vote was taken that graded the drunkards in three lists for posting; viz: 1, notorious; 2, occasional; 3, soakers. The twentieth annual was held in the South Church on May 24, 1833. The address was by Rev. Mr. Holroyd. The pledge had been discussed very fully at nearly all of the annual meetings. This year it was voted to strike out the word "daily" that encumbered the second line of Art. 12, as given above. The practice of gaming was also attacked, and a committee was empowered to prosecute inquiries as to what extent it was carried in the town.

At this time a strong opposition had arisen against the granting of licenses, which had shown itself in the March town meeting. Through Dr. Hewitt's instrumentality, and that of President Edwards of Andover, who somewhere between 1829 and 1833 had conducted a four days revival at the South Church, the total abstinence pledge against distilled liquors had been carried into every home in town, and gained many signatures. On Sept. 3, 1833, Rev. C. C. Sewall and Deacon Fitch Pool were chosen delegates to a state convention to be holden a few days later in Worcester. About this time Rev. J. Cleveland made a very stirring address in the Unitarian Church. At a meeting of the Moral Society on Jan. 28, 1834, it was voted to request the Selectmen to insert in the warrant for the town meeting an order that was drawn up by Samuel P. Fowler, Esq., and voted upon at the meeting of the town on the previous year. John W. Proctor, Esq., ably supported Mr. Fowler and this was the result:—

At a legal meeting of the inhabitants of the town of Danvers, March 3d, 1834,

VOTED, That the following order be adopted, viz: Whereas, in consequence of the change that has taken place in public opinion, in regard to spirituous liquors, it is very generally believed that the public convenience does not require licenses to be granted for the vending of ardent spirits. And, whereas, it is desirable to discountenance the use of ardent spirits in all reasonable and practical ways, therefore VOTED. As the sense of the town, that it is not expedient to license the sale of ardent spirits within the town, and that the Selectmen be hereby instructed and requested to withhold their approbation of such licenses. Copy of Record. Attest:

BENJ. JACOBS, Town Clerk.

Col. Jesse Putnam further urged the town to active measures on this subject and accordingly it was VOTED, That Daniel P. King, Esq., Messrs. Alfred Putnam, Abner Sanger, Robert S. Daniels and Joshua H. Ward, Esq., be a committee to correspond with other towns in relation to licenses for the sale of ardent spirits.

The address on Fast Day of this year was by Rev. J. Moore, the Universalist pastor, in his own church. Dr. Andrew Nichols was chosen president. An elaborate and strong series of resolutions were passed calling the Selectmen's attention to the laws as changed by the legislature in 1832, and requiring that they strictly enforce them, and notify dealers in the town, and two others in Salem not to sell to those parties who abuse the use of spirits. The address on April 9, 1835, was by Rev. Mr. Knapp in his church, the Universalist at New Mills Village. On April 7, 1836, Rev. Allen Putnam made the address. John W. Proctor, Esq., was elected President and John Peabody, Recording Secretary. Rev. Mr. Cowles was chosen a delegate to the national convention at Saratoga Springs. Rev. Gardiner B. Perry delivered the address of 1837 on April 28, in the South meeting house. The annual meeting of 1838 was manifestly one of debate in Rev. Mr. Braman's church. The last meeting held by the Moral Society was its twenty-sixth annual on August 25, 1839, at the New Mills Baptist Church. Rev. E. W. Dickinson was the orator of the day, and A. P. Phillips as secretary wrote the last record.

Following the labors of Drs. Hewitt and Edwards, the circulation of a pledge from house to house, and the rejection of the license system by vote of the town, came the organization of the Danvers Total Abstinence Society. John B. Peirce, Abner Sanger, Elijah W. Upton, Francis Baker, Thomas Stimpson, Isaac Floyd—Miss Floyd's father—Isaac Winslow, who built the house now occupied by Mrs. Abel Proctor, John C. Lunt and his brother Andrew, were some of the active members. The constitution found has no date but as it bears the name of Rev. John M. Austin among the members it was manifestly drawn up during his pastorate with the Universalist society. The pledge reads as follows:—

"We, the subscribers hereby pledge ourselves that we will not use as a drink any intoxicating liquors, or traffic in them for that purpose; that we will not provide them for entertainment or for persons in our employ, and that we will use all suitable means to discountenance their use in the community."

Not much information as to the workings of this society has been obtained, but in every community the total abstinence movement drew fire, and excited opposition, so that the active advocates found their path anything but a pleasant one. There occurred a long struggle between the friends of temperance and the illegal sellers in the town of Danvers. The shoe-manufacturers were in the temperance ranks. They were accustomed to give their workmen orders on the stores for their pay, and as some of the store-keepers supplied the shoe makers with intoxicants, the manufacturers made so determined an objection as to withdraw their patronage from these places and to establish a temperance store. Early in 1835 Rev. Geo. B. Cheever published in Salem "The Dream, or the true history of Deacon Giles' Distillery." For this publication he was publicly horse-whipped, convicted in court and incarcerated in Salem Jail. He had his defenders and condemners in this town, and many were led thereby to take a decided stand for or against the use and traffic in spirituous liquors. The clamor against the system of license which had been strenuously made by Danvers citizens for five years was echoed all through the state and in April, 1838, an indirect form of prohibition—known as "The Fifteen Gallon Law"—was enacted by the legislature. A year and a half later the law was repealed, but the election of county commissioners opposed to the existing liquor laws, and the harassing of those dealers who persisted in selling, plainly disclosed the opposition of the people.

Just the date when the Washingtonian movement reached Danvers is not clear. It is possible that the North Parish was first awakened. Certainly the enthusiasm there was immense. It was reported at a county convention in 1843, that 450 persons had signed the total abstinence pledge at New Mills village and that no liquor was sold there. Many women were active in the Martha Washington organization in that part of the town. Parties from Lynn organized the movement in the South Parish in Upton's Hall, which occupied the ground where the Catholic Church now stands. (The hall is the building on Lowell street, opposite Captain Wilson's, now used for storage purposes.) One meeting was held in the Methodist Church when John Hawkins, Deacon Moses Grant and John B. Gough were present. This was the first time that the latter speaker was in town and he only made a five minutes speech. The "Danvers Fire Fly" dated Thursday, March 7, 1844, states that Mr. Gough lectured in town on the 5th and 6th and on the second evening procured 179 signatures to the pledge which was as follows:—

We, the undersigned, do hereby pledge ourselves as gentlemen, to abstain from all intoxicating drinks including Wine, Cider, Porter and Strong Beer, and we also agree to aid and support one another to the best of our abilities in so doing.

This number of the "Fire-Fly" contains an appeal to "Young Men of Danvers" to organize themselves into a total abstinence society and cites the example set in Salem, Lynn and Marblehead. When the Washingtonian

THOSE WHO USE IT, SAY

I have carefully examined the People's Cyclopedia, and am heartily ready to endorse the same as a work of great value, I am the owner of the Encyclopedia Britannica, and yet do not hesitate to say that the People's Cyclopedia, in many features, is superior, while the cost is far less. I know of no Cyclopedia so fully in the reach of all classes and yet so wonderfully adapted to their needs. W. P. CHIPMAN, Pastor of the Baptist Church, Peabody, Mass.

I have examined the People's Cyclopedia and consider it worthy the attention of any one desiring an excellent book of reference. The very moderate cost of the work is especially to be noted. G. FRED OSGOOD.

The People's Cyclopedia, sold by Mr. A. E. Cady, agent, I regard a Work of rare merit. Its range of subjects and comprehensive of treatment is all that can be desired. It fills a place no other Cyclopedia has done. Its completeness at so small a cost is a very strong recommendation which cannot fail to be appreciated. CHAS. W. SMITH, Pastor of Washington St., M. E. Church, Peabody, Mass.

Before examining The People's Cyclopedia, I could not conceive how so good a work could be made. I can not now imagine how a better one can be made. S. W. MASON, LL. D., Supervisor Schools, Boston.

I deem it an admirable work. It covers the field of knowledge effectively, and gives just that information which all want. In short, it is just the book for reading, thinking Americans. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Brooklyn.

When I had finished a careful examination of The People's Cyclopedia, I decided to purchase it, although I already possessed the Britannica, American and Johnson's Universal. Each of these great works has merits peculiarly its own, but it may, in my judgment, be truly said of The People's, that it furnishes more information for the money than any work extant. Col. JOHN D. WASHBURN, Worcester, Mass.

I am especially pleased with its freshness and accuracy, its brevity and clearness of statement, and at the same time its fulness and completeness, making it, in my opinion, the most convenient and usable of all Cyclopedias before the public. N. A. LUCE, State Supt. of Schools, Maine.

society was formed Moses Tenney—who afterwards removed to Georgetown—was its president and Joseph Poor, now residing on Elm street, was the secretary. Later, Samuel Tucker was president and Amos Merrill, secretary. Two hundred and forty-five names were enrolled as members, and the list scanned in the light of these forty vanished years certifies that the movement must have been very popular. The interest was very general and enthusiastic.

The "Fire-Fly" previously noticed contains the following:—

The citizens of Danvers are requested to meet at Upton's Hall on Monday evening, March 11, at 7 o'clock, to see if they will adopt some measures for the suppression of Intemperance, and to see if they will take any measures to prevent the sale of spirituous or intoxicating drinks in this place.

Danvers, March 6, 1844.

Very soon after the secret organizations sprang into life and attempted a work of education. Monument Division No. 5, Sons of Temperance, was instituted Aug. 12, 1844. This did not surrender its charter until April, 1856. Howard Tent, No. 87, Independent Order of Rechabites, was called together early in the year 1845. Chas. E. Brown was the first C. R., and Frederick Morrill the first secretary. Seventy-four was the number of its membership during its two years existence, and differing opinions considering what constituted immorality was the cause of its death. On December 19, 1845, a second division sons of temperance was instituted. This existed two years and was known as Unity Division No. 21. On Dec. 3, 1847, a third division, Rising Sun, No. 86, was formed. This was no more in April 1851.

In 1859 or '60, a Temperance society was formed which held public weekly meetings in the vestry of the South Church. Some of these meetings were largely attended and quite interesting. A Band of Hope was organized about the same time and held meetings on Saturday afternoons in the same vestry. These organizations probably were the outcome of Rev. Edwin Thompson's efforts as agent of the Mass. Temperance Alliance. Dr. Charles Jewell spoke during this period. Messrs. Isaac Hardy, Jacob Perley, James Perkins and others were the active workers at this time.

In the winter of 1864-5, Mr. William E. Eaton, principal of the Bowditch School, was stirred by some of his boys coming to school under the influence of alcohol. As there was then no temperance organization in town he proceeded to form one. After much deliberation and inquiry he advised the organization of a lodge of Good Templars. This was done on March 2, 1865, when nineteen members took the obligation in the hall over the store now occupied by Horace Bushby. Mr. Eaton was the first C. T. and Thomas S. Trask the first R. S. Later, the Lodge, which was named for Dr. Nichols, occupied the hall in Sutton Block now in the control of the G. A. R. post. It grew very rapidly into power, having in Jan. 1866, 155 members, but soon it declined and was in a weak condition some time before the charter was surrendered in January, 1870. On Dec. 19, of 1866, a fourth Sons of Temperance division was formed—Gen. Howard, No. 40—which lived until Sept., 1874. In Dec., 1872, Excelsior Lodge I. O. of G. T. was formed and on its decease in 1878, or a few weeks later, Star of Hope Lodge I. O. of G. T., still holding meetings in Franklin Hall, was formed. At one time as an adjunct to this Lodge there was a Juvenile Temple with a band of young people pledged against tobacco and profanity as well as the use of intoxicating beverages.

In 1872 our adopted citizens bestirred themselves in their own defence and on March 3 of this year the St. John's Catholic Total Abstinence Society was formed. In 1849, when Father Matthew came to this country he gave the total abstinence pledge for limited periods—in some cases for seven and in others for ten years—to many of his country—men as he walked our streets. On Midway street he administered it to about a dozen persons at one time, some of whom kept it inviolate to the end of life. On March 3, 1881, a Catholic Total Abstinence Society, working in the steady light of his influence and perpetuating his name, was formed. Mr. James Fallon, a member of the Board of Overseers of the Poor, is the pioneer Catholic temperance advocate of Essex county, and has organized or been instrumental in forming a half dozen societies in our immediate vicinity. With him Messrs. Philip H. Coleman, Richard Barry, Timothy Cunningham, Thomas Ray, John Daly, Chas. Carlin, Wm. Farrington, and John Fitzpatrick have gained an enviable record by their efforts to overthrow the curse that more than all other evils has scourged their countrymen, and which has made the Irish people in their adopted land a demoralizing influence, and a setback to this reform. All honor to these men who live for example's sake! Whoever writes a temperance history thirty years from now will find glorious streams of moral brightness reaching down the years from these lives of self-restraint, and total abstinence from all that can intoxicate.

During Rev. Geo. N. Anthony's ministry at the Congregational Church, probably about 1873, a committee on Temperance was included in the various lines of church work. Mr. Isaac Hardy was chosen the chairman in 1873. Fermented wine was used in the communion service until Dr. Reynolds' visit to town when it gave place to unfermented wine. At the Methodist Episcopal church no fermented wine has been used for twenty years, but a Committee on Temperance is a feature for only three years. The Baptist church discarded fermented wine for the Lord's Supper some years ago, while the Universalist only use water.

On July 9, 1873, a number of gentlemen gathered together and determined to form a temperance organization to work up a revival of interest in the cause, and on Sept. 9, the Peabody Temperance Society was formed. Rev. C. V. Hanson was made president and Mr. Caleb C. Collins, secretary. It included no pledge in its plan. Mr. Hanson and Mr. Anthony both preached very earnest temperance sermons this summer to their respective flocks. On October 30, Mr. J. K. Osgood of Maine, the Blue Ribbon Club organizer, spoke in the Methodist Church and urged the formation of a club. Rev. S. P. Smith, who had just been settled over the Universalist society, also spoke in a very happy manner. The meeting was so encouraging that Mr. Osgood came again two weeks later, and with Mr. John F. Coles, delivered addresses in Town Hall, but no interest was awakened. The society occasionally held meetings, invited speakers from out of town, and quite systematically visited the schools and distributed tracts, but circulated no pledge. On March 11, 1875, the temperance addresses made to the High School were counted very fine. On Oct. 6 a meeting of agitation was held, on Oct. 11, the second annual of the society occurred, and on Oct. 13, Thomas N. Doutney spoke in the Universalist Church but failed to create any enthusiasm. It was then decided to form a new society. Those who had signed the pledge on the occasion of Mr. Doutney's address were invited to meet in Temperance Hall and on Oct. 16, 1875, a little handful of temperance workers came together and organized the Peabody Total Abstinence Union. Rev. S. P. Smith was made president; Rev. Daniel Wait, chaplain, and Mr. Geo. A. Lewis, secretary. About a dozen persons gathered on the five or six following Saturday evenings and endeavored to enthuse each other on the importance of doing some work for temperance. This organization opened the way for the Reynolds movement which immediately followed, and sustained for a long time in Temperance Hall on Saturday evenings most interesting and impressive gatherings, at which the speaking of children was a great attraction. In the spring of 1876, when Rev. Mr. Smith left town, Mr. A. J. Hubbard was elected president and retained the office when the organization adjourned sine die.

When the "Woman's Crusade" of 1873 had crystalized into the steady agitation of the W. C. T. U. work of 1875, Mrs. Mary G. Ward of Salem, the organizer of the Mass. W. C. T. U., came to Peabody, and first in a Saturday evening meeting of the Peabody Total Abstinence Union in Temperance Hall, and afterwards in a ladies' Friday afternoon prayer meeting in the parlor vestry of the South Church, urged the women of the town to go actively to work in the temperance cause. On this second occasion—December 10, 1875—the Peabody W. C. T. U. was organized. Forty-five ladies were present, but only fourteen were ready to undertake a dimly-seen work, and none of the fourteen had any comprehension of what they would be found doing. It was possible to have immediately the services of Dr. Henry A. Reynolds of Bangor, Me., the Red Ribbon Reform Club organizer, and so that very afternoon the Town Hall was engaged for him and other arrangements made. It so happened that Excelsior Lodge of Good Templars was holding an anniversary on Monday evening, Dec. 13, 1875, when Dr. Reynolds first spoke in Town Hall, and not one of the well known temperance people of the town was present. The audience gathered looked so disreputable that the M. E. clergyman, who had taken a back seat, declined most positively to offer prayer. As Dr. Reynolds opened no meeting without prayer his words of persuasion induced Mrs. Hambleton, one of the W. C. T. U. ladies present from Salem, to kneel on the Town Hall floor, which never was dirtier, and ask God's blessing on the undertaking. After a short talk by Dr. Reynolds, three officers of the newly organized W. C. T. U. were, much to their own astonishment, called to the platform by him to address the meeting. These were Miss M. J. Floyd, Pres.; Mrs. Gertrude Wiggin, a member of the Executive committee; and Mrs. M. O. Stevens, Secretary.—Many came forward to sign the pledge, nearly first among whom was the man who became the first president of the Reform Club. On Tuesday evening the meeting was much larger, and on Wednesday evening, the 15th, a Reform Club of forty members was organized. Nathan Lakeman was chos n president, and J. Henry Aborn secretary.

Two weeks later Dr. Reynolds came again for two evenings. The audience that met him on the first evening at Town Hall filled it closely. Quarters at Sutton building had been obtained for a Club reading room which Miss Floyd had fully fitted and furnished with the most liberal donations of our townspeople. After the meeting in Town Hall was over the Reform Club and Dr. Reynolds, with a few ladies of the Union, went to these rooms and dedicated them. On the next evening, which was Sunday, Jan. 2, 1876, the South Church was opened to Dr. Reynolds and the men and women he had gathered to his help, the church being crowded, with the reformed men conspicuous in the front pews. On Feb. 22 a great dinner was given the Reform Club in Upton's Hall by the W. C. T. U. It probably was the most generous, genial and whole-souled affair ever carried out in town. The Club now numbered two hundred and thirty-eight members. Some of them were doubtless of the same make-up as those who walked with Our Lord Jesus Christ on the shores of Galilee, and who sought him for the loaves and fishes. On Tuesday evening, March 14, Peabody Ins itute was packed to its utmost capacity for a Mass Meeting and reception to Dr. Reynolds. Everybody united in kind wishes, applause and testimonials to this gentleman, and a spirited and interesting meeting was the result. Later a second similar gathering was held in the same place to do honor to Rev. S. P. Smith, the retiring pastor of the Universalist church, who, more than any other man in town, had aided to set on foot and organize the forces against intemperance that now had become a power.

The Red Ribbon movement is too fresh in the minds of the community for extended comment. It was glorious while it lasted, but the coming generations can only fitly judge it. Some men did reform, some attempted to (God pity them!) and failed, and others, perhaps, did not possess the right intentions. The first secretary, Mr. J. Henry Aborn, kept his pledge inviolate to his death, and so won the affections of those who watched his course that he will never perish out of their hearts. The first President lives triumphant, and so do some of the members, but the Club has ceased to exist in fact and in influence. The Reynolds pledge, which only differed from the Washingtonian in the clause which turned to God for divine help, was as follows:

We, the undersigned, for our own good and the good of the world in which we live, do hereby promise and engage, with the help of Almighty God, to abstain from buying, selling or using Alcoholic or Malt Beverages, Wine and Cider included.

This received about one thousand signatures, eight hundred and thirty-seven being inscribed during the first three months. Meetings were held once a week at Town Hall, the Reform Club and the W. C. T. U. alternating in conducting them. The use of the hall was given free of expense by the town officers.

The Peabody W. C. T. U., when organized, was officered as follows:—President, Miss M. J. Floyd; Vice Presidents, Mrs. Daniel Wait and Mrs. G. W. Haley; Treasurer, Miss Martha M. Hutchinson; Secretary, Mrs. M. O. Stevens; Ex. Com., Mrs. C. V. Hanson, Mrs. John Osborn, Miss Martha O. Barrett, Mrs. Gertrude Wiggin and Mrs. Sarah N. Bancroft. No organization existing in town has more generously possessed the good will of the townspeople than this. Every project, or whim even, that has been born in the hearts of these women to call for money has been indulged. True they have been prudent in expenditures and united in efforts. No Union in the State has been better supported than has this. A history of its meetings, its work, and its experience, would almost fill a volume. Now is not the time to write it. But some salient points belong here.

The membership of the Union, for the first year, was 184. In May, 1876, three members of the Union visited the Selectmen for the purpose of protesting against intoxicants being openly sold in town. They were misunderstood, and their visit was made an excuse for considering the advisability of complying with the terms of the license law, which had been passed the year before, and obtaining a revenue for the town treasury from drink. When the time for the political ferment arrived that fall temperance men and women went with a grand impulse to the support of prohibition. Five or six women were chosen delegates to the Prohibition Senatorial Convention in Salem that nominated Hon. J. J. H. Gregory of Marblehead, before the other party conventions had met, and thus temperance women of Peabody, in 1876, helped to elect the State Senator from this district. The first W. C. T. U. Annual was observed as a convention, when the vestry of the South Church was alive all day and evening with interest for the public. Through the instrumentality of the Union, children to the number of more than three hundred were gathered in a Band of Promise by Misses Wait and Barrett, aided by other ladies, and meetings in Temperance Hall on Saturday afternoons were for a long time a prominent feature of the work.

There were so many temperance organizations in town holding meetings that early in 1877 an attempt was made to unite them for more thorough and systematic labor. The Good Templars, the Temperance Society, the Total Abstinence Union, the Reform Club, the W. C. T. U. and the Congregational church temperance committee, which during 1876 had been very active, each chose one member to confer together and arrange some feasible plan for a union effort. After much consideration the following "call" was issued:—

Desirous of more effective Temperance work, and of the co-operation in it of all citizens who wish to see the moral tone of the community elevated, we respectfully request your presence at a meeting in Temperance Hall, Saturday evening, June 16th, at 7 3-4 o'clock, at which all present may feel free to express their opinions. CHAS. V. HANSON, Chairman of Committee.

The result of the meeting was the formation of a new organization—The Peabody Temperance League—which, though it did a good work for a time, and brought into town some of the best temperance speakers in the country, never became a union effort in the full sense hoped for. During the summer of 1877 members of the Union League attempted to enforce the laws against illegal selling, but a trial and removal of the police officer, who would not do the work required of him, was the only result. The open and free sale of intoxicants, which had been going on in town for years was still continued, with daily increasing temptations. On May 11, 1878, at a meeting of the Union League, it was voted to prepare a petition asking the Selectmen to prevent the illegal sale of liquors. This petition went into the hands of other parties, and when it reached the Selectmen it was interpreted to be a request from fifty of the best citizens for the legalization of the liquor traffic in our midst. Licenses were accordingly granted by the Board of Selectmen, and for the last six years the official nurture and legal protection of the liquor traffic has been the order of affairs. The Temperance League, the Total Abstinence Union and the Reform Club, died of exhaustion soon after.—The Good Templars kept on in a quiet attempt to strive against the rising tide of rum and beer.

The W. C. T. U. held fast to its colors and its undertaken work. At its fourth annual meeting, Miss Sarah E. Perkins was elected President, and Mrs. M. M. Cutler Secretary. In the spring of 1880 the W. C. T. U. drew up an article for insertion in the warrant for the town meeting asking that instructions be given the Selectmen by the voters for or against the granting of licenses. This vote came at an adjourned meeting. An "Appeal" to the voters from the W. C. T. U. had been freely circulated. The vote when declared stood 279 for license to 313 opposed; and yet the Selectmen granted licenses. This year was that on which a President was to be elected. Hon. Neal Dow had been nominated by the Prohibition party as their candidate for Chief Magistrate. When the campaign flags went out to the breeze a Dow and Thompson banner was one of the four displayed. At the close of this year a headquarters was obtained, furnished and opened to the public as a temperance reading room, but it has never been occupied as it deserved, and this attempt to benefit the young men of the town cannot be called a success.

In the spring of 1881 the Temperance Society was galvanized into life, and, in new hands mostly, began to work. Rev. L. L. Wood was president, and Mr. J. T. Cassino secretary. It was instrumental in bringing some first-class speakers into town and in circulating the pledge in the schools during the year of its labors.

In the summer of 1881 a citizens' movement was attempted to urge the Selectmen to make the number of licensed rum shops few and to prosecute those who sold illegally. This was foolishness in its beginning and it continued so even to the fizzle.

Now to sum up the seventy years' effort against intoxicating beverages. In 1813 distilled and fermented drinks, as then known, were probably in use in every home within the borders of the town. Now they are never found in two thirds of the homes, but where there was then probably a store and a tavern where they could be freely bought, there are now forty places.—The unnecessary nuisance of the dramshop where only drink is sold is a modern invention. Fifteen years' agitation, against the immoderate and careless use of these things; for their withdrawal, except on special occasions, from persons employed; and the public reprimanding and setting aside of those who could not succeed in using drink moderately; was followed by a similar period in favor of totally abstaining from the use of distilled beverages, which in its turn was succeeded by the era of total abstinence from all that can intoxicate. These three eras of agitation demonstrated the problem propounded:—that alcoholic beverages are of no benefit to the human race; and further proved that moral suasion is inadequate as a means of correcting the mis-trained or vitiated appetites of the mass. Forty-five years of moral efforts had proved deductions but not remedied evils.

The further premise of 1833-4 was made:—licensing the sale of intoxicating beverages (which are harmful) is mischievous and criminal. For more than forty years this sentiment ruled the town, first actively and afterwards passively. In his Centennial address on June 16, 1852, John W. Proctor said, "Danvers was the first town that took action, in its corporate capacity, against licensing the retail of intoxicating liquors," and also added, "To the credit of the town, its authorities have constantly adhered to the faith then promulgated." This is true of the town of Danvers of to-day, but not true of the old south parish, that, set off and incorporated as the town of Sc. Danvers three years later, still later—some fifteen—became Peabody. "The faith" of other days has been lost, and Peabody has been retrograding every year since it took its name. Where will it bring up morally is a most important question. For twenty-five years temperance workers have only been busy in keeping alive the sentiment created during the previous period. Scarcely an advance step has been taken, except that science and experience has made truths concerning alcohol plainer to the people each year.—"Line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little," has been reiterated the cries of warning, and repeated the admonition of the fathers. Not every community has gone back as has ours. The south and the west have gone forward. Abstractly the reform has held its own.

But in the light of God's advancing truth, the use of intoxicants, the traffic in them, and the legalization of their sale, is to-day a thousandth-degree more of a sin upon responsible individuals and federated powers than it was fifty or even seventy years ago. Physicians now know that alcohol in any shape is a poison; church members now know that alcohol in the communion cup is the cup of devils; legislators now know that licensing the traffic is giving unto it power, influence and respectability; officials now know that "regulating" the business is nurturing an irregularity; those cursed with an appetite now know that open dramshops are to them an ever enticing temptation they are powerless to withstand; philanthropists now know that drink breeds three-fourths of all the poverty and misery, and nine-tenths of all the crime; and voters now know that for every dollar of taxes they are saved by taxing the liquor traffic, they are forced to pay out three dollars for the expense that this same ruinous business has caused. Every individual of these classes who may claim not to know this is wilfully ignorant of incontrovertible facts, and is living a darkened existence in a world of light.

Finally, the South Peabody Congregational and the Episcopal churches more than a year ago organized within their respective boundaries temperance societies. The Baptist Church has quarterly carried the temperance question into its Sabbath school. With these are the Congregational and the M. E. Church temperance committees, the two Catholic total abstinence societies, the Good Templars lodge, and perhaps another secret organization, and lastly, the W. C. T. U., attempting to counteract the influence of forty-one licensed mills for manufacturing drunkards, paupers, murderers and criminals. The W. C. T. U. may not be doing all the work it was when at first the current set with it, but it has not ceased to work and more than all, to pray. God makes bare his mighty arm when his faithful workers hedged in and faint are apparently without an escape. Very few Friday afternoons, since Dec. 1875, have passed when some women have not gone to the place of meeting and asked God's blessing on the temperance efforts, and His powerful overturning of the liquor curse.

The trend of public affairs is towards prohibition. The cloud no larger than a man's hand is increasing. Its time and means of power, in this community as well as in the nation, may not be foretold, but "the stern logic of events" will settle this question right as it has other tremendous issues.

NOTE.—[It is to be regretted that more records of the different organizations have not been preserved. All who have aided by ever so little information in the prepartion of this paper are most cordially thanked by the author.]

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

THE ADDRESS of the Republican State Central Committee is given to our readers in another column. It is straightforward and crisp in its utterances. We hope the suggestions put forth will be heeded in this town. Let there be a fair expression of opinion at the caucuses. Let the best men be chosen as delegates to the convention. Let there be no pledges, but earnest desire for the best good of the State. The first caucus will be holden next Monday evening, when a new Republican town committee is to be chosen, and delegates to the State Convention. We hope the work will be done well. In the choice of a town committee it is desirable to have not only good workers, but those who can work in harmony. They should be liberal and progressive, ready to welcome to our ranks any who are disposed to work with us this fall against Butler. Last year this town went for Butler. To prevent it there is opportunity for hard work in the coming campaign. We believe that with the proper management it can be done, or at all events the majority sensibly diminished.

OUR READERS are commended to the historical account of the temperance movement in our town which is found in this paper. The value of this article in the future is far beyond what our readers of to-day will estimate it. It is interesting as calling to mind the temperance workers of earlier years and as showing the power which this evil has worked in our community through all these years. The methods of work by the different organizations there described may be criticized. But the record has passed beyond them. A greater and higher power will judge their motives. The increase of dramshops in our town has been rapid, and the efforts to restrain the sale of intoxicants almost unavailing. It is not to be wondered at that at times the courage of the temperance people fail. Those who are interested in this movement, and who desire copies of the PRESS for preservation or to send to their friends will do well to secure them at once. We have printed a larger edition than usual, but on account of the length of the article shall not keep it long in type. If therefore our friends are anxious for copies after the edition has been exhausted and there are none to be obtained, we shall be powerless to help them. Secure the PRESS at once.

A statement to the public in regard to the cyclone at Rochester, Minn., Aug. 21, has been made by the Mayor of that city. Nineteen persons were killed and about one hundred wounded. The relief committee has a detailed list of one hundred and twenty-four families, in that city alone, entirely destitute. An appeal is made by him to the public for aid. We have a letter from an eye-witness which we shall publish next week. The closing sentence of the appeal of the Mayor is as follows: "Provisions are plentiful. Money, clothing and carpenters are needed. $100,000 expended in tools, lumber, etc., for the penniless would scarcely put them on their feet sufficiently to enable them to help themselves. All contributions are placed in the hands of a thoroughly organized committee of 21 citizens, and may be forwarded to the undersigned. S. WHITTEN, Mayor.

Mr. J. G. Lowery now occupying a store in Holyoke block will remove into one of the fine vacant stores in Kinsman block about Oct. 1st. Previous to this removal, Mr. Lowery will sell all framed work at a large discount from former prices to reduce stock.

Sunday Services.

Last Sabbath all the churches in town were open. Some of the pastors preached to their flocks for the first time in several weeks, and in three churches it was a re-opening after a vacation season to both pastor and people. The day was one of the finest of the season, and large congregations were the result.

At the South Congregational Church Rev. Mr. Sperry preached from Ecclesiastes 3:21: "Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" The preacher remarked in opening that life was an indivisible unit. It was not cut into sections, but its changes were different manifestations of the same spirit, which was not one in time of worship and another in time of business,—the same in play and work, the same in age or youth. Yet there is truth in the old maxim that no man can do anything without the make-belief of a beginning. In spiritual life there is also need of a beginning. There are no particular times when we can say all things are new; but there are appropriate seasons when it is fitting to review our work, and one of these times is the present. There are motives which underlie our church work. Why is it that for one hundred and seventy years, since the gathering of this church, we have come hither? Deep down in our hearts is a common conviction, beyond all other values, of the value of the human soul. Such prompted the preacher of the text. It does not imply a doubt of destiny—nor of immortality, but it realizes the value of the soul. We may all take sides with the preacher. Nothing else accounts for our presence here to-day. Reverence for the customs of our ancestors may account for it in part, but we need a stronger motive which is found in the soul's value. The preacher did not expect to bring to the minds of his hearers a conviction hitherto unfelt, but to deepen that conviction.

There is one source to which we may look—to Christ. In His dealings with men he cared more for the soul than the body, which was often rebuked. In his intercourse with Nicodemus, he regarded not his station, but dealt directly with the soul. It was the same with the woman of Samaria and at the great day of the feast. It is always the needy one whom He seeks to save. He valued the soul as no one else, for its infinite capacity. Asylums and our varied charities speak the needs of the body. Christianity teaches the salvation of the soul. This conviction can again be deepened by realizing the worth of our own soul. Think of a life that goes on and on; nothing awakens apprehension, the future thought of as a prolongation of the life of the present,—stirred by the same affections, living out the future of our own imagination. The sense of loss is not oppressive to such an one. Not sufficient value is set upon the soul. We are not alarmed at the prospective loss of what we do not value. Whoever feels the sense of God's presence, and knows he is a child of God, has a present sense of the soul's worth. It is also to be learned by the experience of growth. When we have made progress we are brought to consider the true value of the soul.

The uses of this conviction are obvious. It makes us sincere in worship, gives a purpose to our work for souls, makes us courageous and wise, and helps us to bear the discipline of life. It lifts us above human judgment and makes us conscious of what we ought to be; it makes a bond of christian brotherhood. It is easy to adjust our relations with all christians—over all differences—in a true comprehension of this real worth. The preacher closed by an exhortation to his people to fully realize this ideal.

At the Baptist Church the pastor, Rev. W. P. Chipman, occupied the pulpit. There was a profusion of flowers and their delicate fragrance filled the church, while their beautiful colors blended prettily with the bright yellow of the golden rod. The pastor read for his scriptural lesson from the ninth chapter of Acts, and took for his text the seventeenth verse of the same chapter, "Brother Saul, the Lord even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost." Peter denied his Lord, but repented and returned. Next to Peter was Stephen, of whom we know little, but he ranked high with Christ and he was the first martyr to the church of Christ. And at that time it was a dark hour for those early christians, and while the church was looking to God for help, God was preparing to arrest in His own course, in His own way the man who was to fill the place of Stephen; one who should confound the Jews and the Gentiles. It was none other than Saul, who had followed the christians with his ungodly hate. Saul was arrested by God's mercy when he would have destroyed the followers of that Nazarene. How early were his designs thwarted. Suddenly a light broke forth from heaven and while he was blinded by that light, he heard a voice saying, "Saul, Saul why persecutest thou me?" and he was led by the hand to Damascus, blind and repenting, and he afterwards preached that which he once hated.

Our lesson to-day proves first the reality of the christian religion. Saul had all the prejudices of the Jews, and held Christ in supreme contempt; he was not prepared to accept Christ, he was not only a Jew but a Pharisee and had all the religious hatred of his race, the strongest of prejudice. Saul by education and belief was the last to go over to Christ. With his worldly ambition, his birth and the by no means lowly position he occupied, he was lead on. Only an extraordinary event could turn him; only the influence of Jesus Christ. A power that could bring such a conviction to such a soul, must have been Christ. He had no warning of his conversion, he could have been no further from Christ than when he was converted, in fact he was nearer hell than heaven. God grant that this power and conviction may fall upon the hearts of all present. Again it shows the love and mercy of Christ. The darkness and doubt was cleared in the twinkling of an eye and from the mightiest opponent of the church he became its leader. What evidence of God's love for the church? "Why persecutest thou me?" A tender proof is this, that Jesus makes himself one of us. And so it has always been. As after three centuries Saul was converted by the power of Christ, so Luther thirteen centuries later when the Roman Catholic Church had become corrupt came out from it as the leader of the reformation. And there is no part He cannot overthrow. In the darkest hours He is nearest. In all things He and His people are one. There was never a greater conversion, never a greater change, yet it is the same power that can save any soul. The grandest thought still remains to make glad the christian heart,—the love of God stooping down to save his worst enemy. It fills one's very soul with wonderment and we are led to marvel, and not till we grasp that love of God can we explain it. Had He pronounced a curse we should not have been amazed; what could he hope but the vengeance of heaven, and though his hands were steeped in blood, yet the Master speaks from the skies to make him his follower. And yet is it wonderful when you consider His character; and if He stooped from heaven to earth to save Saul, what more can He do for us? Having come to save the sinner His love can save us. Unconverted friends believe this. Are you willing to say God be merciful to me a sinner? Saul obtained mercy and so may you. He became chief, so may you. Salvation and honor awaits you and the same gate is open for you. Will you enter? God grant you may.

At the Universalist Rev. Mr. Sprague took for his text Galatians 1:16-17, "I conferred not with flesh and blood, neither went I up to Jerusalem to those who were apostles before me, but I went into Arabia." The preacher in opening referred with thankfulness to the fact that we had all been spared to meet together again, and hoped that we returned better prepared for our work, and that our labor of love would move on lighter for the rest. Paul, in the chapter from which our text is taken, is describing what he did just before becoming a Christian. He recalls the time when he was stricken down, the events on the way to Damascus, saying to them, "Ye have heard how I wasted the Church of God. . . . . But when it pleased God to reveal His Son in me, I conferred not with flesh and blood, but went into Arabia," Now Arabia was a rocky and sandy country. Paul was leaving one of the most fertile of countries for a land of rocks.—He felt impelled to prepare himself in retirement for the higher work, and to fortify himself by prayer. All was contention; the current of his life was changed; he was no longer Saul but Paul. He wanted to get by himself and prepare for the activities before him. He yearned for silence and solitude. In this he was no exception to the example of Moses and Elijah who came before. It is an appropriate time for silent meditation before a great work. Out of it we are all strengthened and inspired. Power is fostered by silence. Human weakness calls for more thought. The more men have periods of halting for a day or more in the bustle and activity of life, the more will they discover energy to fit themselves for the troubles of life. The man who keeps himself in a continuous strain often defeats his own best purposes; he needs to stop moving at so high a speed, and allow individual reason to assert itself—silence never works mischief. The shallowest brooks roar the loudest. Most any one can talk, but not every one can keep discreet silence. Silence men need at times, and this they must have. It is one of the very attributes of God. The inspiration of the solitary soul is necessary to rectify the desires of the carnal mind. It has been sought by all good men, by Nathaniel, Peter, who was on the house top when the scales were taken from his eyes, and Christ, who spent many an hour in seclusion, and in meditation and communion with God and his own soul. The most creative and active powers of nature take effect in silence. Force, growth, sleep, death—all enter into the life of every man, yet they operate in silence. The earth and all the planets move in silence. God moves the whole creation without sound or jar. What inspiring example for us to imitate? Let us all, like Paul, improve the silent hours for meditation and gain strength thereby.

At the Unitarian church Rev. Mr. Hudson took for his text a part of Luke xiv, 10, "Friend, go up higher." Alluding to the mountain regions of the country which some present had lately visited, making, perhaps, no little effort to stand for a few minutes or a few hours upon some wind-swept summit, he said that there is in human nature something like an instinct prompting it to ascend. We desire to go to the top of all the hills in our neighborhood. We never pass along the bottom of a valley without being sensible of a desire to climb to the elevated ground which shuts us in. We wish to take broad views of our surroundings, and to stand where nothing shall bound our sight but the horizon. Travellers on the plains of the Great West, when they come in sight of the Rocky Mountains, feel a kind of fascination as they look upon those towering masses of granite and snow which seem builded into the very skies.—Some of the most hazardous adventures of modern times have been in the exploration of mountains. An explorer who lately scaled the summit of Mt. Ranior, when asked what led him to make so dangerous an attempt, said that the mountain had bewitched him. He had looked for months upon its mysterious heights with a longing to conquer it; and the longing grew upon him until it became irresistible. This desire to climb, and look abroad upon unobstructed horizons has its source in some of the noblest attributes of our nature. The mainspring of human enterprise is not wholly the hope of selfish gain. Men like to measure their power with whatever opposes them — The navigator may dread the storm, but he also exults in it, when, by his skill and courage, he is able to defy its power. The horrors of war would long since have made war impossible were it not for the glory, the emulation, the daring, to which it gives opportunity.

We find the secret of our human desire to climb, first, in the instinct to overcome hindrances, and second, in the sense of freedom, the larger views, to which it leads. This desire should lead to important religious results. The mind of man ascends by the acquisition of new truth. Truth is acquired only by climbing, and it leads to a broader outlook. Every new truth sets our old opinions in new relations because we see them from a higher point of view. A child can make little of a great book. It may read the Scriptures, but it can understand them only by fragments, but as it ascends in the knowledge of divine principles a new coherence and meaning break out on every page. All men share the possibility, and in some degree the desire, to move ahead morally and spiritually. If we believed we could take no step forward in character, no words can describe the degradation that would befall us. Our hearts might well die within us. But we never can have that fatal belief. As long as reason keeps her throne, no matter what our misfortunes or our transgressions may be, we shall know that we can go upward, and that our salvation is in going upward.

The life that is most narrowly shut in by limitations, the life that is most crushed by suffering, or most bound in the affliction and iron of sin, is not in despair because it has by nature the rebound of hope. It has been the opinion of many wise men that our nature is never stationary; that if it does not advance it falls backward, and many facts in our experience confirm that opinion. No man should be content to stand still. He cannot even be sure that he can stand still. If not advancing, let him suspect that he is retrograding. The deepest voice of nature as well as that of Scripture says constantly, "Go up higher."

This is what the editor of the Chelsea Teiegraph says of the ladies' favorite flower. We might add that he is one of those old fellows who write editorials on the days of their grandmother, but for all that his head is level:—The wild flower called golden rod which has bloomed unmolested for centuries, and which when plucked by the city children visiting in the country, has, heretofore, been ordered to be thrown away by their parents as a "nasty weed," is now eagerly seized by esthetic maidens to make breast nosegays and to adorn their hats.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

During the past week T. E. Wilson has been at work upon the bell in the tower of the South Church. The eye holding the tongue into the top of the bell has been secured, and a new bolt put in to prevent the buzzing which occurred after each stroke of the tongue. The yoke was hoisted away from the bell to enable the workmen to get at the inside of it to fasten the loosened eye, and planks and pieces of joist were carried to the belfry to furnish the necessary support and shores. The balance, a heavy iron weight upon the top of the bell-yoke, was rebolted, and then the yoke itself was firmly secured to the bell. Three days were necessary to complete the repairs, and now the bell seems as sound as when it left its founders, Henry N. Hooper & Co., of Boston. It was cast in 1862 and weighs 2,156.49 pounds. On its inside are two strong springs, against which the tongue strikes with sufficient force to allow it to strike the bell, and the rebounding springs throw it back the instant it strikes, thus preventing any vibrations which would be unpleasant.

H. B. Hooper is early in the field of amusements and announces Friday evening at the Peabody Institute the appearance of Minnie Foster, the celebrated artiste, in her own copyrighted play of "Madcap" or the Banker's daughter. It is a play full of startling and thrilling situations and tableaux, abounding in fun, pathos and music, and is highly recommended by the press wherever it has been produced. Miss Foster is a soubrett artiste of rare ability, and in the above piece, which was written specially for her by Harry Meredith, she plays the part of a little detective, assuming no less than five distinct characters, in each of which wide scope is given to show the versatility and to introduce the refined specialties of this charming artiste. Miss Foster will be supported by a good company, and seats are already on sale by Starr C. Hewitt.

A couple of young men at a boarding house near the square the other day were discussing the operation of carrying bricks from the ground to the top of a building. One boastfully asserted that it was easy and the other offered a small wager that he couldn't do it. They and their friends adjourned to the Catholic church, where repairs are being made on the tower, and the plucky fellow took a load of bricks carrying them to the top where he deposited them. On reaching the ground he said, "Had I known how hard a job it was I would not have undertaken it."

One of our townsmen who goes to Boston on the train every day, might have been a poorer man than he was, if he had not been sharp enough to tumble to the racket. On entering the cars at Concord on the Fitchburg road, he soon made the acquaintance of two very pleasant gentlemen. As they neared Boston one of the pleasant gentlemen said he was temporarily in need of a few dollars and offered the Peabody man a check of $1000 as security for a loan of $100. The P. m. thanked them very coolly and said he was sorry he could not accommodate them.

Here is another answer to apple puzzle: "When the boy who sells three apples for one cent has disposed of 30 apples, the other boy has still 10 apples remaining which are sold two for a cent, and not five for two cents. There the odd cent comes in." The "catch" lies in the statement that as often as one boy sells two apples for one cent the other sells three for one cent, thus making five apples disposed of for two cents. This is true to begin with but it ceases to be true after ten sales have been made and the odd cent comes in after that.

A funny thing happened on Mt. Vernon street, says a resident in that vicinity. In a yard was a quantity of grass that was cut last Saturday and lay in a heap. All of a sudden it began to rise with a rotary motion, the circle at the bottom enlarging as the hay went higher and higher, until it was fully ten feet high, when it all dropped back to the ground. It seemed to be a diminutive cyclone, but there was scarcely any wind in the vicinity at the time.

A horse belonging to S. C. Hewitt attached to his carriage, while turning into Foster street last Monday, stumbled and fell to the ground breaking both shafts and otherwise injuring the vehicle and harness. The horse was assisted to his feet not much hurt.

Goldthwaite's brook has not been so low for years as at the present time. From Caller street down to Grove, there is only a little narrow stream. The bottom of the brook is all bare.

The Chief of Police makes the following report for the month ending Aug. 31. Whole number of arrests 40; assaults 5; affray 4; disturbance of the peace 3; larceny 1; drunkenness 27.

About eleven o'clock this forenoon a man named Thomas Fitzgibbons was severely if not fatally injured. He was sitting on the fence over the brook at the corner of Upton and Walnut streets, and losing his balance he fell backward into the brook, striking his head against the wall. Mrs. James Fallon saw him fall and immediately notified her husband, who went to the rescue. The man was insensible and Drs. Foster and Shanahan were called. It was found that he had suffered a concussion of the brain. He was removed to the house of a relative named Roach on Spring street. It is reported that the man was intoxicated at the time.

The following are a few of the solid persons and firms of Peabody and the amount of taxes they pay: Danvers Bleachery, $3080; Rufus H. Brown, $2218.06; Mrs. Eliza Sutton, $2099.02; Francis H. Appleton, $1191.65; J. B. Thomas, $1515.82; Henry Saltonstall, $1176.25; Estate of Geo. Upton, $1343,-65; Nelson & Merrill, $1105.72; F. Osborn, Jr., & Co., $1153.46; Jacob C. Rodgers, $1351.81; Perley King, $1150.07; Jonathan King, $1974.74.

Mr. David Porter, a well-known citizen, after a lingering illness died at his residence on Webster street last Friday. He was known as a kind friend and a good neighbor. He was a constant attendant at the Cong. Church until overtaken by failing health. He was a member of Jordan Lodge F. & A. M., and at one time held the office of Tyler. He was buried last Sunday with impressive masonic ceremonies.

Last Thursday a boy about twelve years of age was seen to run and throw himself on an empty bark team on Foster street, and then fall to the ground. Several people ran to his assistance, and after a few minutes he recovered. He had thrown himself against the tailboard of the wagon so heavily as to drive the breath out of his body.

As the conductor on the car that left Lynn on the L. & B. horse railroad at four o'clock last Friday, was passing along Lynn street, he got his foot caught between the step and the wheel, throwing him to the ground and dragging him a short distance before the car was stopped. He sustained only a slight injury to one hand, from which the blood flowed freely.

A sad sight was presented last Friday evening on Foster street. A young woman was begging her brother who was reeling along the street to go home with her, and he with brutal language refused. The sister had sent her hard earned money only a short time ago to Ireland to pay his passage over, and this was the reward for her kindness.

Nemo Camp I. O. O. F. of Albany will visit Salem on Thursday, Sept. 20, arriving in the morning. They will be received by Naumkeag Encampment, welcomed by the Mayor, and will visit various points of interest. A dinner and pleasant time at the Willows will follow. A large attendance is desired.

Mr. Arthur W. Littlefield, bookkeeper at the South Danvers National Bank, will be united in marriage to Miss Grace Goodridge of Lynnfield, at the residence of the bride in that town, to-morrow forenoon. After the ceremony the bridal couple will leave for an extended tour. We tender congratulations.

Last Sunday a boy was slyly sliding along Walnut street with a can of beer hidden under his jacket. A policeman guessing the nature of the protuberance, jocularly inquired "What have you got there bub, a tumor?" to which the little rooster cunningly replied, "No, sir, a can sir," and then slid on his way.

The police captured six juvenile fruit thieves in the orchard of Mrs. Spiller on Walnut street, this afternoon. James Tracy, Thomas Donovan, Lawrence McLaughlin, William Murphy were fined $5 each, and Timothy Moylen, after a severe reprimand, was sent home.

Last Sunday morning a man was noticed walking along the bank of Crowninshield's pond and every little while taking something from his pocket and throwing it into the water. It proved that the brute of a man was drowning kittens and that he had disposed of four.

Dr. Fitzgibbons of Worcester, a recent graduate of a medical college, was in town last Saturday, looking over the field and speculating on his chances of securing the Catholic patronage. We fear with Dr. Shanahan as a competitor, his business would not be very remunerative.

Letters advertised Sept. 5.—Mrs. Clara D. Avery, Timothy Donovan, Daniel Emerson, J. L. Eaton, Edward Flynn, Oscar F. Fellows, John Goulding, J. A. Jeffrey, E. A. Maloon, Kate Macarthy, Geo. W. Standley, Mrs. John Sheay, Wm. J. Taylor, Mrs. C. H. Weymouth.

A fellow called Gus Gardner, this morning, while under the influence of rum, unceremoniously entered a house on Elm street, and frightened the lady therein. He was wrong in choosing the time when the men folks were away.

The New York Mercury of last Saturday contains a highly sensational account of the fall of a young lady who graduated from our schools; of her coming into possession of a fortune by the death of an uncle who had been her benefactor; her frantic efforts to find her betrayer and a meeting of a former school mate at Leadville, Colorado, where she had gone in search of her lover. Who is she?

The merchant who advertises sells more goods than the merchant who does not, and can consequently afford to sell cheaper, and then in the aggregate make the largest profit. It is for this reason that it pays to trade with the store that advertises the most liberally.

Last Thursday evening the Republican town committee held a meeting and it was decided to call a caucus for the election of delegates to the State Convention and a town committee for the ensuing year, Monday evening, September 10.

A party of Stoneham people while riding for pleasure in Lynnfield last week, over turned their carriage by turning too short, and all were thrown to the ground. They escaped serious injury. The wheel and other parts of the vehicle were broken.

A party of boys belonging to the Episcopal choir, consisting of Masters Lennie Pierce, Charlie Putnam, Bertie Lyons and others, enjoyed, by the kindness of Mr. Edgar Upton, a fine sail last Tuesday and Wednesday, on board Mr. Upton's yacht, Crest.

Arthur Hughes, well known to the sporting men of this town, who was arrested for selling liquor at Billy Hayes Danvers Washington House last November, and escaped from the court house in Salem, has again been arrested at Groveland by state officers.

School has commenced and a new suit for the boy is now in order. Mr. Gallup of the Naumkeag Clothing Co. is offering some wonderful inducements in this line of goods. Take the boy down and get him fitted.

Somebody said that the strokes of the engine at the pumping station can be heard by the opening of a faucet in town, and felt in the handling of a lawn hose. You can believe this or not—we don't.

A small boy, son of Mr. Daley who lives in Linehan's court, was kicked in the leg by a drunken brute while passing the E. R. R. station last Sunday. Officer Peasley gave chase, but the scoundrel escaped.

Dr. W. O. Gray is finely located in his quarters in the Bank Building. He has a very convenient and well arranged room and would be pleased to see any of his friends who desire dental work skillfully done.

In the High School Hooker's Physiology has been superseded by Dalton's, and in the grammar schools Venable's History of the United States has been changed for the Eclectic, at the expense of the publishers.

In confidence we will tell you of a preventive against sunstroke or lightning. It is to wear a newspaper subscription receipt in your hat. We have got several western subscribers who are running fearful risks.

To accommodate a large demand, Mr. Geo. Stevens has added to his stock a full supply of slates and school stationery, which he is offering at a low price. Get other prices and compare them with his before purchasing.

We are told that a hawk pounced upon an English sparrow while it was hopping in the middle of one of our busy streets, and carried it off in its talons. We wish that hawks or something else would take them all off.

People who live near the new town hall have suffered greatly since the lot was graded, from dust. On Monday all day long it blew in clouds. As one party remarked, should the winds continue the lot will have to be regraded.

A well-dressed stranger arrived in town at a late hour a few afternoons ago and attempted to get a dinner at the hotel and several other places without success. Yet there are some forty licensed victualars in town. What a farce!

The Center school opened Monday morning with 590 pupils. The only change in the teachers is that Miss Price takes the first primary and Miss Poole, who had that last year, takes the little ones or the school that Miss Price had last year.

Mr. John P. Peabody has presented to the Essex Institute the rare and costly volumes of "Hamersly's Army and Navy Register of the United States" for the century between 1779 and 1879. As a book of reference for persons interested in these matters this publication, thorough and explanatory as it is, is an invaluable aid, and is placed where it should be.

The N. Y. & N. E. railroad will knowingly have no drunkards in its employ. An engineer, conductor and fireman were all discharged last week.—This is practical temperance work worthy of close imitation.

A RIDDLE.

WHAT'S MY NAME?

For the Stomach Ache, I take the cake
For the appetite, to put it light,
It makes one eat an awful sight.
The grocers smile, the butchers grin,
The providers say it is a sin,
And good Benj. B. just simply moans,
We'll be eaten out of house and home.
A great many physicians do delight
In prescribing me with all their might.
For patients "all run down" having poor blood,
They find me as good a medicine as ever stood.
For patients recovering from sickness, such as diphtheria and fevers,
To help make strength I am a tremendous lever.
For that tired feeling so common in the summer,
The way I strengthen and make energetic is simply a wonder.
My name by this time you have probably divined
Is simply SARSAPARILLIAN HYGIENIC WINE.

TIRED ALL OVER.

WHAT RESTED AND REFRESHED A WEARY MAN IN MEMPHIS.

"No, it never amounted to an acute pain, but continued to be a dull weary ache in the small of my back," writes Mr. Jas. Thomas, of No. 59 Madison street, Memphis, Tenn. "This was an old experience, and life became dull music. I was tired all over, with pain in the lower limbs, and a habit of lying awake nights. Recently I tried one of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS and was decidedly relieved within twenty-four hours. It may have been Providence that did the work, but I give the credit to Benson's porous plaster." Mr. Thomas' reverential idea does him credit, but Providence works by agents, and among them Benson's plaster ranks first as an external remedy. It acts quickly in relief and healing, and renders life better worth living. Price 25 cents. Look in the middle of the plaster for the word CAPCINE. Ask your physician about it. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Book Notices.

THE YOUNG LADIES' JOURNAL for September, has been received from the International News Company, of New York. The contents are varied and interesting. There are continued stories, sketches, poetry, music, etc., while every available space is filled with illustrations of all the latest styles of dress patterns, lace work and other fancy work, always of interest to ladies. The number also contains the usual mammoth fashion sheet, also the colored plate and instructions in fancy work. Dressmakers cannot afford to be without this work. Ask for it at the Peabody News Company.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

DR. CHASE'S RECEIPT BOOK should be in every household in the country, as it is replete with practical information on every subject which may arise in the house, on the farm, in the workshop, and the office. It must meet with a ready sale. See the advertisement in another column of our paper. We predict that whoever is fortunate enough to secure an Agency in this section for this wonderful book will surely make money.

For twenty-five years I have been severely afflicted with Hay Fever. While I was suffering intensely I was induced through Mr. Tichenor's testimonial, to try Ely's Cream Balm. The effect was marvellous. It enabled me to perform my pastoral duties without the slighest inconvenience, and I have escaped a return attack. I pronounce Ely's Cream Balm a cure for Hay Fever. Wm. T. Carr, Presbyterian Pastor, Elizabeth, N. Jersey.

I can recommend Ely's Cream Balm to all Hay Fever sufferers, it being, in my opinion founded on experience, a sure cure. I was afflicted with Hay Fever for twenty-five years, and never before found permanent relief. Webster H. Haskins, Marshfield, Vt.

We have received from the International News Co., of New York, a copy of a very interesting Monthly Magazine entitled BOW BELLS. Among its pages are short and continued stories, music, poetry, and a large amount of information. Presented with each copy are two large fashion-plates, composed of various toilettes and colored by Parisian artists. A four page music supplement, entitled, "Sweet Sister Waltz," a cut-out pattern for the Howard mantle and the Bow BELLS Art Work Instructor by Madame Elise. All the different features are interesting. We hope to be remembered next month.

SPRINGFIELD, PRINCE GEORGE'S Co., MD.—Mr. Chas. G. Addison, of the above place states: "I sprained my right knee causing intense suffering, and the use of a crutch for several weeks. I found no relief in other remedies and finally tried the miracle of cure, St. Jacobs Oil. In a short time I could bend my knee—which had been as stiff as an iron-rod,—laying aside my crutches and was able to walk as well as ever."

THE MANHATTAN MAGAZINE for September contains an interesting illustrated description of Western scenery, and besides a variety of fiction, poetry and readable articles in every department. For a new magazine it is becoming popular. $3 a year. Office, Temple court, N. Y.

A VEXED CLERGYMAN.

Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and endeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet, how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial Bottles given away at Hazen A. Spaulding's Drug Store.

Opinion of Dr. Mott, late Government Chemist, on Allcock's Porous Plaster.

My investigation of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER shows it to contain valuable and essential ingredients not found in any other plaster. These ingredients are so perfectly proportioned that the Allcock's Porous Plaster will not cause blisters or excessive irritation, and I find it superior to and more efficient than any other plaster. HENRY A. MOTT, Jr., Ph.D., F.C.S., Prof. of Chemistry, N. Y. Medical College, etc. No. 61 Broadway, New York, May 23, 1883. aug 8—4t

THAT DOUGHTY DUCHESS.

OPPOSITE OPINIONS ABOUT A WONDERFUL WOMAN—HER THUMB AND FINGERS.

"Crack nuts with her fingers? Why, you can't mean it!" cried a young lady graduate of the Normal College, in the utmost astonishment.

"But I do mean it," affirmed her big brother, who had taken several prizes in athletics, "and I re-assert it: that Cymburga, wife of Duke Ernest, of Austria, could crack nuts with her fingers and drive nails into the wall with her thumb."

"What a monstrous woman!" said the young lady. "What a useful woman," amended her big brother.

The Austrian Duchess was mighty because she kept good hours, good habits and perfect digestion.

Mrs. Alice Strong, of Pittsburg, Pa., writes a different story about herself, but deserves praise for her frankness. She says: "For the past three years I have been subject to severe attacks of colic and cramps, and exhausting attacks of Diarrhœa. Weary of experimenting with medicines, I turned, without hope, to PARKER'S GINGER TONIC. Three bottles cured me entirely. I have tried it also for other ailments with which women are often afflicted, and it far surpassed my expectations. I am happy to offer this testimony for the benefit of other women."

Ladies who are interested in Mrs Strong's letter, will please remark that PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of ginger. It cures colic easily, but by virtue of other rare and powerful ingredients, it also masters all diseases of the Blood—such, for example, as Rheumatism, Consumption, Scrotula, and all disorders of the Kidneys, Liver and Stomach. It is a vitalizer and stimulant, but not an intoxicant. Prices, 50 cents and $1 per bottle. Hiscox & Co., Chemists, New York.

WHAT OUR BOY SAYS.

He has been told that a ready method to stop hiccough was to place the tips of the fingers beneath the lower ribs and press upward.

His girl had the hiccoughs bad last Sunday night and he would have followed the above advice but for the "corset" have to persue.

The postmaster told him the vignette on the new postal notes was engraved from the portrait of a postmaster's pretty daughter.

He don't know who she is, but if he had said a daughter of a would-be-postmaster he would have immediately located her in this town.

A lot of young men spend their money on lotteries.

He has heard that marriage is a lottery.

The trade dollar is now received in New York at its full value of 100 cents.

As soon as they are current in Peabody at that value he will spend those he has received from the "boss" at 85 cents.

If the apples of Eden were as knarly as those offered for sale around here, Eve and her feller wouldn't have been driven from the garden.

His girl invites him to sit in the hammock when he calls.

He thinks that the hammock is knotty but is nice.

That he about froze yesterday.

That he went home one Saturday night after he had been "devil" two weeks, and said to himself, "Six years, eleven months, two weeks and then I,ll be through.

Sept. 5th will be the opening of the two Fairs in Boston. It is the third year of the N. E. Manufacturers' and Mechanics' Institute, and the attractions will this year exceed all others.—The opinion was expressed last year that a Fair on such a scale could not be a success year after year. But the management were in no way discouraged, and it was disproved almost before the season was half through. The Art department will be very elaborate this year, and the women's department will contain many attractive features. The foreign exhibition will also have its attractions. Goods from all parts of the world will be on exhibition, and cases of goods have already arrived from Pekin, China, Moscow and Japan. These exhibitions cannot fail to be productive of much good, in both an educational and business way.

When Gov. Butler vetoed the $2,000,000 State tax bill he stated, as an argument for a lower sum, that there were several items included in the bill which were not likely to be called for this year, among them one of $130,000 to pay for the Way estate, of which he said, "It is hardly probable that the title to that estate can be settled and the various conflicting interests therein be adjusted within the next six months." This was only a few weeks ago, but last Saturday $125,000 was paid to that estate on a warrant signed by the Governor. This is a good illustration of his practical familiarity with the affairs of the State, and the real value of his judgment.—Palmer Journal.

Messrs. W. S. Nevins, W. D. Dennis and B. D. Hill are arranging for another Union Club excursion to the White Mountains. They will go about Sept. 8, and visit the Crawford and Franconia notches. A circular will be issued shortly, giving full information.

The hosts of friends of Mr. Lucius Tuttle, general passenger and ticket agent of the Eastern Railroad, will be pleased to learn that he has recovered sufficiently to be out, and has gone to the mountains to recuperate. The Crawford House will be his headquarters for a few weeks.

Read Frank Cousins' new advertisement. The new "Bee Hive" is as busy as ever, and the bargains are just as astonishing to its patrons.

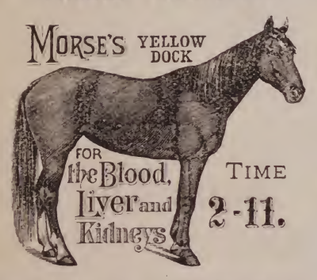
PLAIN WORDS



ARE BEST TO EXPRESS THE SUFFERING SO LONG ENDURED BY A MOST EXCELLENT LADY, MRS. G. FISHER, 29 CLARK ST., NEW HAVEN, CONN. HER KIND AND GRATEFUL EXPRESSION TOWARDS THE MEANS THAT AFFORDED RELIEF.

Facts clothed in plain words are best. Mrs. George Fisher lives in a pleasant cottage at 29 Clark St., New Haven, Conn. She says: "I was a terrible sufferer from Liver disease for a period of twelve years. My family physician told me that it was chronic inflammation of the Liver. I tried a great many remedies recommended for liver difficulties. I was under the physicians' care a great deal, but could get no relief, until I began taking Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. I experienced relief at once, and to-day I'm enjoying good health through the use of this. I had also been a great sufferer from rheumatism in my limbs and shoulders, but I have been cured entirely through the use of FAVORITE REMEDY. I consider Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY a most excellent medicine. I know of many in this city who have received great benefit from the use of FAVORITE REMEDY. It is, sir, a good medicine. I know it, for I've tried it."

Mrs. Fisher is a lady of character and means what she says.

Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your Liver disordered? Have you derangement of the Kidneys or Bladder associated with Constipation of the Bowels? If so, you want Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Dr. Kennedy practices medicine and surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. Miscellaneous.

TO THE PEOPLE OF MASSACHUSETTS.—The call for the Republican Convention marks the opening of the approaching political campaign. No one can overlook the significance of the result in Massachusetts this autumn upon the next Presidential election. At the same time it would be worse than idle to disguise the fact that the coming election is essentially a State campaign. To the people of Massachusetts State issues of almost unprecedented gravity justly outweigh at this time all other considerations. During the past year Massachusetts has been foully slandered for personal and party reasons by her supreme executive magistrate and his followers. Under the same auspices an administrative policy of spoils in the State and spoils and plunder in the city of Boston has been set on foot which is utterly at variance with all the habits and traditions of Massachusetts. The duty of the hour is to drive from power and authority those who are responsible for this policy, and who embody and represent such principles in politics and government. State issues of this nature far transcend party limits. They come home to every man to whom good government is dear and to whom the honor of our beloved Commonwealth is precious. For this reason the Republican party has cordially invited all who agree with them at this time on these vital questions to join them in selecting delegates to their State Convention. In every town and city let the caucuses be full and free. Let strong and representative men be chosen as delegates. Let these delegates come together unpledged, to consult and deliberate freely and carefully. If this is done a candidate will be selected and a support assured which will make victory as certain as the arrival of election day.

The Republican party and those who will act with them in the coming election will put aside all lesser issues and will do battle in defence of the good name of the State and for those methods of administration and government which have made Massachusetts honored and respected in all her past history. They seek a full and free vote and the amplest expression of the will of the people. They are determined to maintain the honor of Massachusetts, and in such a cause they have no fear of defeat.

In behalf of the Republican State Committee,

H. C. LODGE, Chairman.
GEO. A. FLAGG, Secretary.

Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb have arranged seven different pleasure tours for September. They comprise visits to most of the great northern resorts and natural wonders, including Niagara Falls, Watkins Glen, Saratoga, Lake George, the Ausable Chasm, the Catskill Mountains, and the historic city of Newburg, in New York; the Lehigh Valley, Mauch Chunk, with its famous "Switchback" or Gravity Railroad, Glen Onoko and the Wyoming Valley in Pennsylvania; the St. Lawrence River and Rapids, the Thousand Islands, and the chief cities of Canada; and the romantic lakes and mountains of New England. There are opportunities to bring many of these places into single tours, and each separate programme will be found to have some special attraction to win the favor of tourists, while all possess the advantage of cheapness and excellent arrangement. Three excursion parties will depart from Boston over three different routes September 4th, and others September 10th, 14th, 17th and 24th. A descriptive circular, which gives the details regarding all the trips, may be had by addressing W. Raymond, 240 Washington street, Boston.

The subserviency of the present city government of Boston to the liquor interests can hardly go beyond the point already reached, where in two instances school buildings, in good repair and in every way equal to the demands of the occasion, are abandoned in order that licenses may be granted to certain parties to sell liquor on premises that are within the 400 feet limitation of the school building. They cover the real purpose under the pretense of the removal being sanitary necessity. The general interests of the tax-payers aer of little consequence when balanced against the bar room proprietors, who sustain the present admistration.—Lynn Union.

Damonia, the new remedy advertised in our columns, is a magnetic mineral earth lately discovered in Texas, which a careful analysis of our most prominent chemists declares to contain the most potent medical ingredients. A trial is recommended.

The clerk of the weather has been giving us a fine article.

The whole-souled man has been found at last. He bought a stamp at the post office the other day, and offered to pay the clerk for "licking" it for him. But money was no object to our post office clerk.

FIRE DEPARTMENT NOTES.

Hose 4 are getting ready to hold a grand fair some time in October. They will offer thirty-five prizes. The fair is to be held for the purpose of raising money for a new uniform and also to refurnish their hall.

Fire was discovered on the roof of Harrington's tannery, last Saturday afternoon, about three o'clock, and was put out by the prompt use of the hand hose. The fire was set by sparks from the chimney.

A new Button steamer passed through Salem last Monday, on its way to some town in Maine.

The Engineers held a meeting Thursday evening, in regard to the charges preferred by one of their members, that a certain hose manufacturer had been paying a commission to one of the Engineers. The accused Engineer has requested that his dealings with the hose company be fully investigated.

Ex-Foreman Parker of the Hose company is a noted "bug hunter," and thinks of joining the Essex Institute on their next field meeting.

When the Truck "boys" arrived in town last Wednesday evening, some of them were carrying brooms, and the report was started that they had won the prize for the best appearance in line.

Quite a number of ex-firemen attended the muster from this town.

A call from West Peabody, Sunday noon, sent the old Torrent hand engine and a reel of hose to the swamp back of the school house, to be used in putting out the peat fire that has been burning for several days. A detail of three men was sent with them to take charge. An alarm was struck on Hose three's bell at about one o'clock.

The second day of the Portsmouth muster opened cold and disagreeable, with a perfect gale blowing from the east. The line was formed and the procession started at about 11.30 in the morning, in the following order:

POLICE.
Chief Marshal and Aids.

FIRST DIVISION.
Portsmouth Fire Dept., Chief Willard Sears.
South Berwick Band.

Col. W. R. Lee S. F. E. 2, Marblehead.
Delegation from Laconia S. F. E. 1, Laconia, N. H.
Delegation from Eagle Hose Co., Concord.
Fire King S. F. E., Chelsea, Mass.
Abel Proctor H. & L. Co. 1, Peabody.
Eagle Hose Co. No. 1, Peabody.
Vidette Hose Co., Woburn.

FIFTH DIVISION.
Haverhill Cornet Band.
Gen. Grant S. F. E. Co. 1, Haverhill.
Andover " " " " Andover.
E. A. Straw " " " " Methuen.
Veteran Hand Engine Co., Marlboro.
Remington Horse Power Fire Engine.
Safe Guard Hand Engine Co., Kennebunk.

Among the invited guests we saw Mayor Hill of Salem, Donavan of Lowell, Long John Wentworth of Chicago, and Gov. Hall of New Hampshire.

The march was a long one and the streets were dry and dusty. After the parade the clambake on Pierce's island was the central point of attraction, and it was estimated that there were over 6000 people on the island at one time. It took about a hundred and twenty-five bushels of clams, sweet potatoes and green corn to fill up the crowd of hungry firemen. After the clambake came the sham fight, which was a little better than the previous day.

The Peabody "boys" arrived in town Wednesday evening, thoroughly tired out, but all had enjoyed themselves, notwithstanding the report to the contrary.

In the Band Contest in the evening of Wednesday, the Haverhill band carried off the prize.

The Abel Proctor H. & L. company wish it to be distinctly understood that their quarters at the Central House in Portsmouth were perfectly satisfactory, and they are well pleased with their fare and treatment while there.

Hose 1 did not fare as well as the Hooks did in the matter of hotel accommodations as they were obliged to change their quarters about one o'clock in the morning on account of the vermin.—"They ought to have looked out for that."

The trial of engines on Thursday resulted in the following score:

STEAMERS.

			ft.	in.
Richard Vine,	Amoskeag,	Biddeford,	269	5 1-2
Torrent 1,	"	Nashua,	264	1-2
E. A. Straw,	"	Methuen,	235	5 1-2
Col. Lee,	Silsbee,	Marblehead,	234	6
Victor,	Amoskeag,	Salem,	220
Gen. Grant,	"	Haverhill,	215	5 1-2
Cocheco,	"	Dover,	215	2 1 2

The prizes of $100, $75 and $50, were given to the first three named engines.

In the hand engine trial only two engines worked. The Triumph of Berwick played 193 ft. 9 1-2 inches, and the Granite of Newmarket 142 ft. 6 1-2 inches.

The Hose carriage race was the next in order, only two companies taking part. The rules were, to run one eighth of a mile, connect to a steamer and lay 200 feet of hose, and make all ready to play. The time, as taken by the judges, was:—Phœnix Hose Co. Keene, N. H., 59 seconds; Veterans, of Marlboro, Mass., 60 seconds. The prize of $70 was given to the Phœnix "boys."

The winning companies made a parade of the city with brooms.

The trial of the Remington horse power fire engine resulted in a stream of about 125 feet perpendicular and 158 feet 6 inches horizontal. This engine is built for small towns where a steamer or hand engine could not be afforded, and is a novelty in fire apparatus. It costs about one third as much as a steamer and can be run by one horse. It throws two streams, and will do good fire service in a place where there are no high buildings.

The torchlight parade of Tuesday evening was very good, but not as many companies took part as was expected.

The Navy Yard department has three steamers and the necessary hose carriages. The steamers are kept in constant readiness with steam up at all times.

No blame is attached to the management of the muster, by the members of Hose 1, for their poor quarters, as they were hard pushed for accommodations, and were informed that the quarters assigned the Hose boys were neat and clean.

Portsmouth is far behind Peabody in the efficiency of their fire department.—Their horses are kept quite a distance from the engines, and their hand apparatus is very heavy and hard to handle.—They have got four steamers, three of them Amoskeag and one Portland make, two fire extinguishers, one H. & L. truck run by hand, and two four-wheeled hose carriages run by hand. The most of the hose is leather, in good condition. The department numbers 132 men, under the command of Chief Engineer Willard Sears and four assistants. The firemen are a fine set of men generally, and did all they could to make things pleasant for the visiting firemen.

The old Eagle hose carriage was sent over the road to Boston, Monday, to the works of Bowditch & Cogswell, who are to rebuild it. It will have a seat and step and be fitted for a horse or to be run by hand.

The question has been asked lately:—Why is it that the horses and driver of the H. & L. are allowed to be out of town two or three hours at a time, as they have been for the past few days, while hauling drain pipe from Salem. They have made three trips a day into the central part of the city, and then deliver the load at Pike & Whipple's, being available for fire service only a few hours each day. When the company went out of town they had to furnish men in their places. Why should not the same rule apply to horses and driver, or else keep them within the limits. ZERO.

WEST PEABODY.

An ecclesiastical Council is to convene to-morrow at School House Hall, at 10.30 A. M., to deliberate upon the expediency of organizing a branch of the Rockville Cong. Church. If the decision of the Council is favorable a church will be duly formed in the afternoon, with appropriate excercises. The South Church of Peabody, the two churches in Danvers, the Tabernacle church of Salem, the two in Lynnfield, the church in Wakefield, and the church in Mt. Vernon, N. H., have been invited by letters missive to be present.—Letters missive have also been sent to Rev. Geo. B. Jewett, D. D., of Salem, and Rev. W. A. Lamb, of Newton Highlands. Sixteen stand ready to unite with the new church—eight on confession of faith and eight by letter. There are good reasons for believing that this number will be increased to twenty-five or thirty within a year. For years religious services have been sustained in this part of our town, brethren of the South Church being the pioneers, co-laboring with brethren here, some of whom have gone to their reward. Several years ago this parish, so to speak, was united with that at Rockville, the two mutually supporting a pastor and sharing in the parish expenses, as both fields are weak financially. But the people of West Peabody have not had the full privileges of church membership, and it is now thought that the time has arrived when they should be duly organized as a church. At the same time the proposed action is somewhat unique. It has been found necessary by our Home Missionary Society to yoke feeble churches together for mutual support. In this case a congregation simply, unorganized, has been yoked with a church, and the proposition is to organize, not altogether an independent church, but a branch of the Rockville church, each church to co-operate in that which concerns both, but to act independently on those matters which the nature of the case would seem to require, owing to their separation of four miles.

Mr. Geo. A. Flint of Boston, son of Mr. Thomas Flint, formerly a resident of West Peabody and a Christian worker, is to present the new church with a communion set. A barge for West Peabody will leave Peabody Square at 9 A. M., passing through So. Peabody.

The habit of carrying pistols is on the increase, and the owners of such weapons are very careless in their use. Last Sunday morning a gentleman named Day, while shooting with a revolver at a stray squirrel, near Spring pond, barely escaped wounding a little girl who was coming in the direction of the shot. A man may sometimes need a revolver to protect his home, but he does not need it elsewhere.

The Essex Institute will hold a meeting with the West Peabody Farmers' Club the middle of this month by invitation of that organization.

The frost on Monday evening did great damage to the pickle crop in this vicinity, killing nearly all the vines.

Spelling is one of the lost arts in New Hampshire. Out of eight applicants for places as teachers in Manchester, seven couldn't spell "saccharine" or "Genessee," six could not spell "abridgment," five failed on "benefited," and three each on "guage," "vitriol" and "Tennessee." Even "February" was too much for one of them.—Herald.

Poet's Corner.

The Dude.

"What is the dude, papa?" she said,
With sweet inquiring eyes;
And to the knowledge-seeking maid,
Her daddy thus replies:

A weak mustache, a cigarette,
A thirteen-button vest,
A curled-rim hat—a minaret—
Two watch chains cross the breast.

A pair of bangs, a lazy drawl,
A lack-a daisy air;
For gossip at the club or ball,
Some little past "affair."

Two pointed shoes, two spindle shanks,
Complete the nether charms;
And follow fitly in the ranks
The two bow-legged arms.

An empty head, a buffoon's sense,
A posing attitude;
"By Jove!" "Egad!" "But aw!" "Immense!"
All these make up the dude.

A Scheme of Emigration.

The Brewers should to Malta go,
The Boobies all to Scilly,
The Quakers to the Friendly Isles,
The Furriers to Chili.

The little, snarling, caroling babes,
Who break our nightly rest,
Should be packed off to Babylon,
To Lapland or to Brest.

From Spithead, Cooks go o'er to Greece,
And while the Miser waits
His passage to the Guinea Coast,
Spendthrifts are in the Straits.

Spinsters should to the Needles go,
Wine-bibbers to Burgundy.
Gourmands should lunch at Sandwich Isles,
Wags at the Bay of Fundy.

Bachelors to the United States,
Maids to the Isle of Man;
Let Gardeners go to Botany Bay,
And Shoe-blacks to Japan.

Thus emigrate, and misplaced men
Will then no longer vex us,
And all who are not provided for
Had better go to Texas.

Selected Story.

THE LOST WILL.

Old Gerald Rushton was dead and buried, and all the dear friends were in a state of astonishment and consternation over his will, for it named his pet and protege, Marian Gray, his sole heiress, while his nephew, Robert Rushford, was not even mentioned.

'There is some strange mistake,' Mr. Wilde, the lawyer said. 'There was a later will than this drawn up after Mr. Robert came home, and leaving the bulk of the property to him. In it Miss Gray was generously remembered too; but this one which makes her heiress was made while Mr. Rushford was ignorant that his nephew had escaped. I supposed this will had long since been destroyed.' 'What caused you to suppose so?" was Robert Rushford's very natural question.

The lawyer replied that his client had told him—on the occasion of his drawing up the second will—that it was his intention to put the first one into the fire.

'And I thought he had done so. I never doubted but this was the latest will. It seems, however, that we have got hold of the wrong document; the other is still in existence somewhere. We will have a thorough search for it—'

'And until you find it, or if you fail to find it, this one stands,' said Robert, quietly stating a fact which the lawyer was forced to admit.

Meantime the heiress by the first will and legatee by the second had sat quiet and still. She listened, with her eyes cast down, but spoke no word, while her friends and acquaintances discussed her, and not always quite inaudibly.

'What a very awkward and peculiar position for Miss Gray! What an opportunity—if the will did not turn up—to show her magnanimity and sense of honor, by making over the fortune to young Rushford. Doubtless, in such a case, he would be most generous to her, and really, you know, to a girl of Miss Gray's birth and former position a few thousands would be a fortune. What was her position? A daughter to old Rushford's housekeeper, my dear, brought up as a governess or something—came on to visit her mother when the old man was sick, and nursed him so tenderly and skilfully that he could not be persuaded to part with her again. She has been as a daughter in the house ever since and if young Rushton had never turned up—if he had really been lost at sea as was long supposed why, you know, rich old men are eccentric, and there would have been nothing very astonishing in making her heiress, after all. But now it would be terrible. Utter ruin to the young man's prospects in life. Of course his engagement with Florence Huntley would be broken off. Florence was not fit for a poor man's wife—a lovely creature—and he so infatuated, my dear; it will break his heart to lose her.'

'She is not over eager—she bears her honors meekly—shouldn't wonder if she turns the fortune over to the nephew after all!' was the comment of many after they left the house and went their several ways.

They would have judged differently if they could have seen her that night, locked securely in her own room, the blinds and shutters closed, no eyes save those of Heaven upon her. She unfastened her dress and drew a sealed and folded parchment from her bosom—the missing will; she gazed on it long and earnestly.

'Miserable document,' she whispered. 'If I should give you to him now what ruin you would work for me. Yes, you would rob me of all I prize, and place it in the keeping of another. And will he lose Miss Huntley for being poor? What is her love worth, then? And she is so dear to him that it will break his heart to lose her—as it would mine to lose the one whom I love! Whom I love! Whom I love!' she went on, in the same low whisper, clasping her hands in a burst of anguish. 'Whom I love, but has no thought for me. Only for her—and will my action part them? Is it a sin? Will he ever, ever forgive me? Is it a sin to part true lovers, but are these true? We shall see—for if they are poverty will not part them!'

And so the stream of gossip flowed—some portions of it finding its way to Marian's ears—until the searching party returned and announced that, as yet, they had not found the second will.

There was a marked increase of respect toward Miss Gray after this intelligence, and some would have congratulated her, but she checked them.

'It is too early yet,' she said with a sad smile.

But the gossips agreed that the chances were very favorable.

'And if she really is the heiress, my dear, why of course it's dreadful for the young man—terrible—but still—'

Public opinion was disposed to be kind to the heiress in any case.

When she lay down to sleep that night the lost will lay under her pillow, and a sealed letter beside it addressed to Robert Rushton; Marian kissed that name before she went to sleep.

'He will forgive my sin when he reads my letter,' she thought. 'I do but obey the dead.'

All the next day the will lay warm in her bosom, while Robert and Mr. Wilde searched wearily through the house. It was hard to see his disappointed face, and feel that she could make all well so easily.

'I must obey the dead,' she told herself. 'I must obey the dead.'

'She puzzles me,' he said to Robert; 'but somehow I fancy she will give you your money after all; yes I do believe it.'

'So do I not,' replied Robert. 'Women are so mercenary. See how quick Florence Huntley has thrown me over. It was worth the loss of a fortune to find her out. Fancy marrying a girl in the belief that she really loved you, and afterwards finding that she only wanted your purse. That would have been my fate if I'd got the fortune. I was hard hit too, while I thought her a woman with a loving heart, but I shall survive my disappointment. If I thought there was any danger of Miss Gray's indulging in Quixotic acts of renunciation I should take measures to prevent it; but you will not find much of that kind of thing among women, believe me.'

At last they gave up all hope of the lost will. Robert resigned himself to what seemed to be a hard fate, and Miss Gray was declared Gerald Rushton's lawful heiress. Mr. Wilde made no secret of disgust.

'There might be some arrangement by which you could fulfil the wishes of the dead, Miss Gray,' he said. 'I judge you are hardly one to play the cuckoo by pushing the true bird from the nest in order to occupy it yourself. I can remember the second will.'

To this broad hint she replied quietly, 'The will may yet be found, sir. Excuse me if I hesitate to tax your memory while chance remains. Believe me, my most earnest wish and endeavor is—to obey the dead.'

He did not understand.

Mr. Wilde began to think the same as time went on. For six months Marian went quietly on her way, obeying—while the lawyer accused her of ignoring—the wishes of the dead.

Robert was an apt writer and obtained employment on the press, whereby he made a living. Marian rolled by him in his uncle's carriage in the street. It seemed as if the ungrateful cuckoo had pushed the true bird out of the nest after all.

'Mercenary—mercenary to the core!' was Robert's reflection, as he lifted his hat to his uncle's heiress as she rode by, and admired, in spite of himself, her sweet, pale face. 'Looks as if there might be a heart behind those soft, dark eyes—looks like a woman to love and be loved, but they are all alike—mercenary to the very core!' He was sensible of a feeling of disappointment over Marian. 'She should be of a higher, truer, better type than Florence was, if appearances go for anything at all. She should have been willing to give up to me the fortune. I would'nt have accepted the sacrifice, but I could have admired and respected her for being ready to make it. But they are all alike.'

Reaching his lodgings he found Mr. Wilde waiting for him in a tremendous state of excitement, and holding an open letter in his hand.

'Look here! Just received this! Listen:—'

DEAR SIR;—Be good enough to call on me at 7 P. M., and bring Mr. Rushford with you. The will is found. I have sincere pleasure in placing the true heir in possession of his own at last.

Very respectfully,
MARIAN GRAY.

'Where was it found? Where was it found?' cried Mr. Wilde, as Marian gave the document into his hands. 'Where on earth was it found, my dear?'

'It was never lost,' said Marian, quietly. Then she told them all.

'Old Mr. Rushford knew of his nephew's love for Miss Huntley and did not approve of it. Yet he feared that to oppose it would only confirm the fancy. He had great confidence in me, gentlemen, and revealed to me his plans. I knew the contents of both wills. During his last illness he gave the true one into my care, with instructions to conceal it six months. 'By that time my nephew will be thought of as a poor man,' said he 'and the girl who fools him with a pretence of love will show herself in her true colors.' This letter, Mr. Rushford, will confirm my words; and if,' she added timidly, 'if I have sinned in parting you from your love, oh, pardon me! Perhaps she may yet be won, now you are rich again, and I—I but obeyed the wishes of the dead.'

'And in so doing earned my lasting gratitude,' cried Robert warmly. 'Florence is not worth winning. I can imagine no more miserable life than that which must fall to the lot of her husband. And it is worth more than the fortune to know that in you I find a true woman at last, whose heart and mind do not belie her face, but one is as lovely as the other.'

He stopped short, for Wilde's hand was on his arm.

'Read your letter first,' said that gentleman, coolly, 'and then we'll read the will.'

Robert obeyed him.

'The letter contains Marian's statement and confirms the expression of a wish. Do you know what the wish is?'

'No,' she answered in surprise; 'I do not.'

'But you would advise me to comply with it, of course—you who fulfilled his wishes so religiously? and this wish is also my own. Yes, my most earnest desire.'

Marion laughed sweetly.

'It should be easy to comply with, then,' she remarked.

'It will be to me, but it depends on another—upon you.'

'Upon me!'

'Yes, dearest Marian, upon you. Mr. Wilde here is going to inform me, I know, that this new will gives the fortune all to me. I can receive it only on one condition. Can you guess what it is?'

'I will not guess; you shall tell me.'

Her eyes fell beneath his—the conscious crimson dyed her cheeks.

He caught the little fluttering hand and raised it to his lips.

'If I take fortune from this precious hand, give me the hand as well,' he said. 'Darling Marian, I love you! I have loved you longer than I knew. Be my sweet wife!'

She shrank back, blushing, trembling.

'I am so poor.'

'No, no; rich rather—rich in goodness, wisdom, beauty, love, and I adore you. Nay, you will consent—it is my uncle's wish. You must obey the wishes of the dead, you know. Must she not, Mr. Wilde?' he added, with a sudden recollection, but that discreet gentleman had quietly stolen from the room.

'I will obey the wishes of my own heart, first,' said Marian. 'Dear Robert, can it be that you really love me?'

'With my whole heart!' And you Marian?'

'Oh, I have loved you long,' she whispered on his breast.

They were married, and the finding of the will made little difference since they shared the fortune together.

Miscellaneous.

From the Cyclone.

ROCHESTER, Minn., Aug. 20, '83.

FRIEND FARNHAM,—Yours of the 27th received. Was very glad to find that you had not forgotten us. Neither myself nor any of my family were injured or suffered loss in the cyclone, as we are on the opposite side of the town from that which was destroyed. The portion north of the railroad, consisting of about two hundred dwellings, was utterly annihilated. The central portion suffered considerably, but the extreme southern part wholly escaped. I send a paper giving particulars, and inclose a circular letter drawn up by myself. I was not at home, but was in the central part of town, and did not go down cellar, but sat (or stood) on a bank where I had a good view of the whole affair. The heavens were in frightful commotion for a few minutes prior to the storm, and then two very swift currents of air from the southwest and northwest respectively met just west of the town, forming a funnel shaped cloud that took up everything it touched. I say a funnel formed in sight of here. It certainly appeared to do so, but as the cyclone came from many miles farther west, what we saw may have been the cyclone as it came more and more fully into sight. The roar as it came on was so loud that we could hear nothing of the crashing of buildings close at home. You probably wouldn't believe half I would tell you of the awful force of the cyclone. Nothing that has been, or can be, written gives any just conception of it.—Where houses and trees were thick a casual glance would lead you to suppose it was a smooth stretch of prairie. The material of the buildings was scattered for miles around in small fragments. Nearly all the stones were broken in small fragments. In not less than nineteen cases out of twenty trunks were broken open and the clothing scattered and torn so as to be utterly worthless. Indeed, scarcely any of it has ever been seen since.

In sight of where I am writing a board about six feet long and four inches wide (pine) was driven through the trunk of a six-inch ash leaved maple tree, and there it stays with about three feet of it on each side of the tree as if morticed in. A man, J. M. Cole, was lifted one hundred feet into the air, his clothing torn to shreds, and every bone in his body broken; a man and his wife stood in the middle of a first-story-room floor—and in a twinkling the whole house was carried into the field, and they found themselves on the chamber floor of the wreck; a family of five rushed for the cellar, but found on opening the door that the house had been moved so that the cellar door no longer opened into the cellar. In a moment the house was a mass of kindling wood, and three of the five were dead. A little later I helped to place their bodies in a wagon. A friend of mine—John Vidder—was in his cellar alone, watching intently to see what would happen next, and he declares that the house was taken from over his head so quickly that he did not see it go. He thinks it went while he was winking. A woman sat on the ground clinging to a post, and her husband had his arm around her and was also holding to the post; the next thing he knew his wife and the post were gone. She was carried some distance and killed. A woman was alone in a very strong log house. The house was so thoroughly demolished that a stranger could not tell where it stood, (there was no cellar,) the logs being broken and scattered in all directions. The woman was found, terribly mangled and stripped of clothing, about forty feet away, in an old cellar.

Well, I might go on all day, but this is quite enough and more than you will believe. Of course I did not see all of these things, but did see enough to satisfy me that none of them are improbable. Doubtless some of them are exaggerated, but it would be difficult indeed for one to manufacture statements stranger than things that I know to be true. That was a fearful night after the storm. I was out till nearly morning helping to pick up the mangled and the dead. The team that I accompanied conveyed twenty-one helpless or dead persons up town. It seems to me that in many respects Cold Harbor, of which I have heard you tell, was not to be compared with it.

Sincerely,
F. L. COOK.

California as a winter resort is beginning to meet with great favor from Eastern people who desire to escape the rigors of their own climate. Last season Messrs. Raymond and Whitcomb organized a party in Boston for a six months' visit to the Pacific Coast, with a sojourn of five months at the elegant and fashionable Hotel del Monte, Monterey. The result was in every way gratifying to the fifty or sixty participants. The coming season two similar parties will be taken out, and the plan of the excursions has been so far broadened and elaborated that it is sure to meet with increased favor. The first party will leave Boston Thursday, October 18, and the second Thursday, December 27. Both parties will journey out by the Southern route, halting at several places on the way for rest and sight-seeing. Two months at the Hotel del Monte, Monterey, will then follow. After that time individuals may extend their visits to any points they please, and Messrs. Raymond and Whitcomb have so extended their relations with hotels on the Pacific coast that no less than nine very desirable points may be included under their system of board coupons. These include, beside the Hotel del Monte, Monterey, and the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, the following: The Arlington, Santa Barbara; Santa Monica Hotel, Santa Monica; Sierra Madre Villa, San Gabriel; Horton House, San Diego; the Glenwood, Riverside; Palace House, Colton; and the El Capitan House, Merced. Ample time is also left for visits to other points if it is desired. The tickets for returning eastward will be good at any time, so that individuals can exercise their own preferences, making a long or short sojourn in California, and waiting for the return of their party according to the regular itinerancy in May or June or not as may suit their pleasure. The homeward journey will be over the Central and Union Pacific routes, and will be broken by a visit to Salt Lake City. Never has the freedom of independent action been combined with the advantages of the party system to so great an extent as in these excursions. Representatives of the management will accompany both parties, and an agent will at all times be at Monterey to attend to the wants of the excursionists. A descriptive circular giving full details of this novel excursion scheme has been issued and may be had of Mr. Raymond, 240 Washington street, Boston.

MOULTON AND JOHNSON'S GREAT CLOWN.—Another illustration of Malcom's quick wit is as follows: He was playing in the pantomime called the "Flying Dutchman," in which the great effect was the crossing of a ship in full sail over the stage, representing the wide ocean. The agitation of the waves is generally figured in a theatre by a large blue and white cloth, which covers the entire stage, and under which an assorted dozen of small boys keep in constant motion to give the cloth the ceaseless movement of the ocean. The piece was a great success and had a long run, and in the course of time the sea-cloth began to show signs of wear. One night as the ship came gliding across the stage with Malcom as its captain, standing in the prow the cloth parted, and in the midst of the watery waste stood a small boy. The eyes of the audience were upon him and the illusions of the stage were about to be dispelled, when Malcom shouted, "Man overboard!" and reaching out over the waters as the ship sped away, he seized the urchin by the shoulder and lifted him over the bulwarks into the vessel.

THOSE WHO USE IT, SAY
I have carefully examined the People's Cyclopedia, and am heartily ready to endorse the same as a work of great value, I am the owner of the Encyclopedia Britannica, and yet do not hesitate to say that the People's Cyclopedia, in many features, is superior, while the cost is far less. I know of no Cyclopedia so fully in the reach of all classes and yet so wonderfully adapted to their needs. W. P. CHIPMAN, Pastor of the Baptist Church, Peabody, Mass.
I have examined the People's Cyclopedia and consider it worthy the attention of any one desiring an excellent book of reference. The very moderate cost of the work is especially to be noted. G. FRED OSGOOD,
The People's Cyclopedia, sold by Mr. A. E. Cady, agent, I regard a work of rare merit. Its range of subjects and comprehensive of treatment is all that can be desired. It fills a place no other Cyclopedia has done. Its completeness at so small a cost is a very strong recommendation which cannot fail to be appreciated. CHAS. W. SMITH, Pastor of Washington St., M. E. Church, Peabody, Mass.
Before examining The People's Cyclopedia, I could not conceive how so good a work could be made. I can not now imagine how a better one can be made. S. W. MASON, LL. D., Supervisor Schools, Boston.
I deem it an admirable work. It covers the field of knowledge effectively, and gives just that information which all want. In short, it is just the book for reading, thinking Americans. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Brooklyn.
When I had finished a careful examination of The People's Cyclopedia, I decided to purchase it, although I already possessed the Britannica, American and Johnson's Universal. Each of these great works has merits peculiarly its own, but it may, in my judgment, be truly said of The People's, that it furnishes more information for the money than any work extant. Col. JOHN D. WASHBURN, Worcester, Mass.
I am especially pleased with its freshness and accuracy, its brevity and clearness of statement, and at the same time its fulness and completeness, making it, in my opinion, the most convenient and usable of all Cyclopedias before the public. N. A. LUCE, State Supt. of Schools, Maine.

PEABODY, MASS.

WEST PEABODY.

In accordance with letters missive issued by a committee appointed by the Rockville Cong. Church, and those proposing to organize themselves into a branch of the same church at West Peabody, an Ecclesiastical Council convened Thursday, the 6th inst., to hear and act upon the matter submitted. The South Church of this town, the Tabernacle Church of Salem, the two Cong. Churches in Danvers, the two Churches in Lynnfield, and the Church in Wakefield were all represented.

The weather was all that could be desired; a delightful September day full of sunshine, the air filled with the fragrance of pines, all nature seeming to respond in hearty sympathy with the feelings of those who wended their way to the school house, where the council was to gather. A barge conveyed about twenty of the South Peabody people to the gathering, most of them members of the church. Nearly if not quite two hundred people assembled from the neighboring country at the school house hall, in the course of the day. The hall presented a most inviting appearance. Deft hands had tastefully decorated the walls back of the pulpit, the chandelier, and the lamps, with evergreen mingled with early fall flowers. The front of the pulpit was festooned with evergreen, looped up at the center by golden rod and other familiar blossoms by the wayside. Bouquets graced the pulpit and platform. Everything wore a bright, cheerful aspect, as though the people of the community, in joyful anticipation of the consummation of a long cherished desire, had endeavored to make that outward expression of the inward feeling which should make all about them happy, and cause all to feel that they were welcome. In this, at least, they succeeded admirably, for every face wore a cheerful smile, and happy greetings and warm hand-shakings seemed the order of the day.

A table extended across the south end of the hall, loaded down with substantials for the "inner man." That table was a work of art, as well as a board spread with eatables, tempting the appetite. One hardly knows which to admire most, the skill of the West Peabody ladies, as manifested in their cookery, or the skill apparent in the arrangement of the same, with fruit and flowers on the clean white linen. For both arts they are famous, and if our people wish to test the truth of this statement, let them attend the next mid-Winter festival which these ladies expect to give in this same hall.

A stand in front of the pulpit platform was an object of tender interest. Upon it stood an elegant silver communion set and baptismal font, the generous gift of Mr. Geo. A. Flint, whose father was a former resident of this place, and a warm supporter of the meetings in this community, being Superintendent of the Sunday School for eight years. About half past ten Rev. W. G. Sperry read the letter-missive and called for a nomination of moderator. Rev. C. B. Rice, of Danvers, was chosen, and Rev. H. L. Brickett, of Lynnfield, was elected scribe. After prayer by the moderator, the council reviewed the action that had been taken by the people who wished to be organized as a church. The Pastor read a full record of all the preliminary meetings that had been held, and the action that had been taken, which resulted in calling the council. This was supplemented by verbal statements of the nature, needs and history of the religious work in West Peabody which were made by the Pastor, by Mr. W. E. Siner, Jr., of Danvers, who was formerly the Superintendent of the Sunday School for many years. Rev. W. A. Lamb, who ministered to this people for about two years, answered questions that were put to him relative to his work here. Letters were also read from Rev. Geo. B. Jewett, D. D., of Salem,—who for a number of years preached to this people—warmly approving the proposed action; also from Rev. C. C. Carpenter, of Mt. Vernon, N. H., who was pastor for five years, endorsing the proposed organization, and expressing deep regrets at his inability to be present. Miss Mary Floyd of the Rockville Church, expressed, in behalf of the delegation present from that church, the hearty sympathy of its members with those who proposed to organize as its branch, and she spoke of the joy it gave them to welcome this band of fellow laborers to all the privileges of the church. After this extended review, the Council voted to be by itself, retiring for deliberation to one of the rooms below. The questions presented to the Council for its solution proved to be interesting enough, and difficult enough, to extend the deliberations late into the afternoon, and it was nearly five o'clock before the vote, approving the action that had been taken and deciding to organize, was reached. A recess was taken just before one o'clock, when dinner was served, the members of the Council and all visitors being invited to partake. After this substantial and ample repast, the Council retired once more to deliberate, and the people resumed their sittings to await the result.

And they did wait, too, nearly three mortal hours, patiently, hopefully, and good naturedly, the members of the Sabbath School, meanwhile, helping to relieve the tedium by singing a number of spirited selections from their hymn books. No council, perhaps, was ever convened in Eastern Massachusetts to deliberate upon just such a proposition as that presented to it, although an organized branch of another church is not a new thing in the West. For some years past it has become the settled policy of the Mass. Home Missionary Society to yoke together two feeble churches, when circumstances permit, in order that, by the mutual support, both churches may have a pastor; and there has been a growing feeling all along that our policy ought to, and can, provide for this state of things, so that both churches may have the same pastor settled over them, and that both may have recognized responsibilities to the same pastor and to each other.—Until of late, the only way to meet this condition of things was, to settle a pastor over one church, the other engaging his services. This method, of course, is unsatisfactory. If it is a good thing for one of these churches to have a pastor settled over it, then it ought to be a good thing for the other church to enjoy this same privilege; and so, in one or two instances lately a pastor has been installed over two separate churches. This was the case recently at Lynnfield, when Rev. Mr. Brickett was installed over both churches. This state of things gives rise to many interesting queries, e. g., suppose one of these churches (not at Lynnfield, of course, for with such an excellent pastor as Mr. Brickett such a thing would be out of the question) suppose one of the churches should wish to dismiss its pastor; it could do so, although the others might strongly desire to keep him. Then, too, what is the status of each church in a Council of Conference? Has the pastor a right to two votes, as he is pastor of both churches, each of which is represented by pastor and delegate or delegates? Such questions as these arise; nevertheless, the altered condition of things in these times calls for some action to meet the present need, and so, as an experiment, this plan, not perfect or entirely satisfactory, perhaps, has been devised. It is a new thing, but it has ever been the boast of Congregationalists that their policy is shaped by a sanctified common sense, and that it can provide for every contingency. So it has laid hold of this new thing, as it has of many others in days gone by, a fact seemingly lost to the sight of those who are forever admiring the stern virtues of the fathers, and are content to do as they did.

The proposition to organize, not an independent church altogether, but rather a branch-church, so that it might act independently so far as local matters were concerned, while at the same time an organic union might be found to exist in the adoption of the same creed and covenant, and certain joint rules of action, seemed to those calling the council an advance upon the double system alluded to above. As a new thing, the proposition led to a long debate. It was thought by some that the ends desired by this people, the privilege of church ordinances, might be attained by going on with the work as heretofore and administering these ordinances at West Peabody, the Christian people uniting with churches elsewhere. The good sense of the Council, however, led them to see that the people needed some local organization to which they would feel bound by a community of interests, and by solemn vows. It was felt to be a better thing for the Christians living in a community to have church memberships in the same, if possible, rather than to have their interests divided among several churches. So the final approval of the Council was given to this experiment, with the hope that in the practical working it shall meet the religious needs of both communities.

The result of the Council was received with hearty satisfaction by the people, who began to think the prolonged deliberation ominous. As the afternoon was nearly spent it was found necessary to omit most of the usual exercises, and so, after a preliminary statement by the moderator, Rev. W. G. Sperry—who had been chosen during the temporary absence of Rev. C. B. Rice—and the reading of the minutes by the scribe, the services began by singing the hymn, "I love thy Kingdom, Lord." Rev. D. N. Beach offered the Prayer of Recognition, Consecration and Fellowship. The pastor then read the names of those who were to form the new church. There were fifteen, eight to unite on Confession of Faith, and seven by Letter. These fifteen then arose and assented to the Articles of Faith of the Rockville Church. The pastor then baptized eight of the candidates, and read the Covenant, to which all assented. The Lord's Supper was then celebrated, Revs. C. B. Rice and W. G. Sperry officiating, and Deacons Richard Smith and Jacob Perley distributing the elements. After singing another hymn the pastor pronounced the benediction, and the congregation slowly dispersed.

So passed a day long to be remembered by the people in this part of the town, a day which witnessed scenes in which all who have the best interests of the town at heart may truly rejoice. This experiment of a branch-church promises much good. It gives the pastor the satisfaction of seeing tangible results of his labors, as he gathers believers together in one fold. It gives to those who have never had them the privileges of the sacraments. It unites two people into one, distinct, only as each body widely separated from each other must be in the observance of certain rites and privileges; one, as mutually laboring together and praying together for the support of the one church, "Distinct as the billows, but one as the sea." May the glad anticipations which this event has awakened be abundantly realized. J. W. C.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

The Boston Theatre Company will appear in the "World" at Mechanic Hall, Salem, next Monday evening, Sept. 17, under the management of Moulton & Johnson. Sale of seats opens to-morrow (Thursday) at Ropes' drug store. This company is well known—it always draws a full house, and is always worthy of it.

A fair audience, for this town, was present at the Peabody Institute last Friday evening, when Mr. Hooper presented Minnie Foster and her combination in "Madcap," in which she impersonates five different characters.—Miss Foster is a sprightly actress and a good singer, and the cast was in many cases exceedingly good.

Only two weeks more and "Pop" will cease to fizz on the Bijou stage, in Boston. It has drawn excellently, and will continue, no doubt, to attract that great public which seeks, at the play house first of all, to be amused. John Mackay, Marie Jansen, Irene Perry and the rest now invest the performance with the greatest life and "go," and the Bijou walls nightly echo to constant laughter and applause.

Irene Perry sings a new song, "They've Captivated Me," in "Pop" this week at the Bijou. The song is the work of Mr. E. E. Rice and Mr. J. Cheever Goodwin.

Annie Pixley will appear at the Park Theatre, next week, in her new play of "Zara," for the first time in Boston.—The play will be brought out with the usual attention to details for which this theatre is noted, and with a strong cast.

Jalma is to have its first presentation at the Boston Theatre, Monday evening, Sept. 17. The speaking characters will be sustained by Messrs. Wm. Redmund, Mrs. Thomas Barry, Miss Edith Kingdon, Miss Grace Thorne, and other strong favorites. There will be fully four hundred people engaged in the presentation, and the grand ballet of one hundred will be under the direction of Prof. Mamert. Six hundred new and magnificent dresses will be worn. Magnificent armors have been manufactured expressly to order by J. L. Kennedy & Co., the eminent firm of Birmingham, England. The scenery will be furnished by Mr. Charles S. Getz, and the music will be directed by Mr. Napier Lothian, and played by the unequalled Boston Theatre orchestra. The outlay for Jalma has been far greater than any hitherto made for a spectacular drama in America, as the cost involved in one scene alone is fully $20,000, and the enormous expense has been cheerfully assumed in the faith that the presentation will be worthy of the appreciative patrons who have been so generous in past seasons.

Attention is directed to the advertisement, in another column, of property in Danvers, at the Beaver Brook station. There is a house containing twelve rooms, in good condition and well built, together with a barn and sheds. The land comprises about one-third of an acre, and an excellent opportunity is afforded for engaging in manufacturing. The close proximity to the railroad would avoid the expense of cartage, and goods could be shipped easily and at little expense. The place will be sold at a low figure, and can be connected with the Danvers Water Works at little expense. There is also a good well of water on the spot. Full particulars as to terms can be obtained at this office.

The scarcity of mackerel this season, as compared with last year, cannot be fully accounted for, but the Fish Commission have a theory which may account for it. The Commission finds that mackerel spawn floats about at or near the surface of the water for a week during the period of spawning and hatching, and if during the critical week there is an in-shore wind the young mackerel when hatched have an in-shore home and never forget it, but will surely return to it when they become adult fish three or four years later; if, however, the spawn is blown to sea, the mackerel have no home and do not school, but when grown will act precisely as they have this year.

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

GOVERNOR Butler has given out word that Councillor Haskell must not be returned from this district. Maybe it won't make any difference to Gen. Butler whether he is or not.

THE WOBURN Journal publishes in full the taffy which is being administered in large doses to the press of New England by the New England Fair Management. We suspect its publication is a sly bit of sarcasm on the part of Brother Hobbs.

WE HEAR it rumored that the greenbackers of Essex County are to be "left out in the cold" this year by the democrats. This, we presume, is to punish them for the defeat of Chas. P. Thompson in the Congressional district. We hope they will try and bear up under the trial.

PREPARE TO shed a tear. Wendell Phillips has decided that he can no longer support Butler. He says he is no longer a friend of the laboring man. E. Moody Boynton is also outspokenly denunciatory of the Governor, regarding him as having "gone over to the Goulds and Vanderbilts."

THE SEASON at the Point of Pines substantially closed last Sabbath, and the hotel is closed. It is no secret that the season at this place has not been a success. On the contrary it has been considerable of a failure. It is evident that the grounds must be thrown open to the public to ensure any extensive patronage.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Boston Advertiser this morning, writing of Essex County politics says the county "has been neglected too long, and the Butler people are strongly intrenched. They control the check list in all the large places except Salem, and it is notorious that they can manipulate them very handily for their own advantage." We presume Peabody is included in this catalogue.

ALL TALK about calling Ex-Gov. Long from his present position to receive the nomination for Governor this fall is foolishness. If there is no republican in Massachusetts save John D. Long who can carry the State against Butler, we, for one, are willing to be defeated. And this without disparaging, in the least, our late Governor. We believe we can name a half dozen men, any one of whom, with hard and united work on the part of the Republicans, can be elected.

THE TONE of the leaders of the Republican party, to which the address of the Central Committee gave the key note, is one of conciliation. Why not? The contest is not strictly a party one. Butler was not elected last year by the democrats or greenbackers. It will be the same this fall, if he is chosen. It is Butlerism against the rest of the State. Let those who desire the defeat of Butler, and the nominees of the democratic party, close up. Let the ranks be unbroken.

SECTION 3d of the same statute under which Mr. Stevens was summoned to appear, is as follows: "Whoever travels on the Lord's day, except from necessity or charity, shall be punished by fine not exceeding ten dollars for each offence." Who of us, in this town or any town, is not liable to the penalty of the strict letter of this law nearly every Lord's day? Ought not these laws to be revised, and a more liberal code, more in accordance with recognized custom and the public sentiment, be placed in their stead?

THE LETTERS of declination of Ex-Governor Talbot, as well as of Gen. Devens, are admirable in their spirit. They reflect in a great measure the manifest wish on the part of all the gentlemen whose names have been mentioned in connection with the office, to bury all personal ambition for the good of the cause in which the party is to play so important a part. And if all signs do not fail, we shall see at the coming convention an instance of the office seeking the man instead of the usual custom of the man seeking the office.

SOME OF our exchanges are taking the ground that it is wise to leave open the question of the republican nominee for Governor until the time of the convention, on the ground that Butler's purposes may be more developed then. This is a great mistake. It ought not to make the slightest difference as to the nominee of the Republican Convention, whether Butler should decide to run again or not. The best man whom that convention can select should be taken, in any event. We want Massachusetts redeemed for the Republicans this year, and it will be an honor to the man who leads the party to victory.

WE PROTEST against the manner in which the Boston papers, particularly the Advertiser, are reporting the lists of delegates to the State Convention. They are given in almost every instance as "Pierce for the first choice," "probably for Pierce," and the like, when we doubt if there has been any attempt to ascertain their real status, or that it could be ascertained. Our delegates are given for Pierce; as far as we know they are for the best man to beat Butler, and we don't believe they have decided on Pierce or any one else as their first choice. If it shall appear that he is the best man, well and good. But we don't like this attempt at a boom for any man.

GEN. BUTLER'S aide-de-camp, Mr. Tarbox, has done a good thing for the Republicans this fall in removing Mr. Bovey, one of the clerks in the Insurance department. The object of the removal is no secret. It is frankly stated by Mr. Tarbox that it was done to reward one to whom he is under obligations, which means that all but Butler men must go. Mr. Bovey has been a clerk in that department for a number of years; he is the best known of the Andersonville prisoners in this state, and there is no intimation of unfaithfulness on his part, in the performance of his duties.

We do not believe that the soldiers of the late war should have all the offices. But Mr. Bovey's case is a particularly sad one. There is no one to whom the State is under greater obligations for his devoted service to his country than Mr. Bovey. That he is alive to-day is almost a miracle. And we doubt if a removal could have been made wherein greater sympathy will be excited against the administration than this one. "Whom the gods will destroy, they first make mad."

THE RECENT criminal prosecution of George Stevens, under the blue laws of the State, has the appearance of persecution. No other violator of the law has been summoned to appear, this case having been singled out of the many who are liable under the provisions of the same statute under which Mr. Stevens was arraigned.

We desire it to be distinctly understood that we do not uphold Sunday traffic or Sunday labor. We would also bear our testimony against the growing inclination to make this day less and less a day of rest. Outside of New England Sunday is far differently observed from the most liberal interpretation of the law recognized here. And the too evident drifting in New England towards the customs of New York and the West is observed with pain by our law abiding citizens. But in this case no warrant has been issued against other violators, nor is it probable that any will be, at least by those at whose instance this complaint has been made.

It is charged that Mr. Stevens keeps the doors of the waiting room of the horse railroad station open on Sunday, and that sales are made from his counters in violation of Sect. 2 of the Statute relating to Sunday, which is as follows: "Whoever on the Lord's day keeps open his shop, warehouse, or workhouse, or does any manner of labor, business or work, except work of necessity and charity * * * * shall be punished by fine not exceeding fifty dollars for each offense."

Let us look a little at the circumstances under which this place was opened on the Lord's day. We respect the feelings of those who conscientiously believe that no horse car or any other public conveyance should be run on Sunday, and who, when required by duty to visit a neighboring place some miles distant, will walk in preference to patronizing such public conveyance. Yet the running of cars on that day has become almost a case of necessity, and we question whether it would be considered less a case of "necessity and charity" for any of our pastors to travel in that manner to preach in a neighboring pulpit, than to harness his own horse and carriage or hire one of a livery keeper, to reach the same destination. In the former case others besides himself can seek the same conveyance; in the latter case, the same number of people must seek a larger number of private conveyances, to the greater violation, it seems to us, of the letter of this law.

The opening of the new horse railroad from Lynn necessitated, in itself, a violation of this blue law. Yet it was known that the road would run cars on Sunday and that the travel would be greater on that day than on any other; and among all the objections to the laying of the road we heard none on the score of a violation of this law. The road has become an established fact.—Large numbers of people ride over it on Sunday. The granting of the charter of the road contained the provision, we understand, that a station for the accommodation of the public in waiting should be maintained at each terminus, during the hours of travel, on every day in the week. Such a room is at once a convenience and necessity. No one, who was on the Square during the first Sabbaths of the opening of the road, and before Mr. Stevens had his station completed, doubts this. The crowds hanging around the base of the monument and at different points along Main street and the Square, reminded one of a Fourth of July celebration.—Our Selectmen saw the necessity of a place of waiting for these people, and our chief of police stated that if such a place were not provided it would be imperative on the part of the town to increase the number of police. The first day that this station was opened a great change was manifest. Everything was quiet and orderly.

Now, as to the sales on that day. It has been tacitly admitted in different parts of the State, where such waiting rooms are open, that articles of refreshment may be sold on the Sabbath.—True, it is contrary to the letter of the law. But this admission allows restaurants in Boston and other places to keep open, where they do not have an innholder's license, and do not lodge travellers. It allows the stations in Lynn, both at the Central station of the horse railroad, and at the Revere Beach depot, to maintain a place for the sale of refreshments. It allows the station in So. Peabody, opened at about the same time and selling the same articles of refreshment as Mr. Stevens, to remain undisturbed. What is sold on that day by Mr. Stevens that cannot be obtained elsewhere? We know of nothing save what fruit he may sell. He sells cake, pies, and the usual legitimate refreshments for a hungry man who is spending the day here. This, or a similar meal, he could obtain at the hotel. He sells confectionery. So do all the apothecaries. He sells soda water. So do the apothecaries. He sells cigars. They can be obtained at the apothecaries, at the hotel, at the barber shops and at other places. Stationery and other articles in trade he does not sell on the Sabbath, and he does not sell liquor of any description; why, then, is he complained of, and no one else? If we are to have this law enforced, let us have it done without malice, and impartially. Let us have no apothecaries open save for the absolute necessities of the sick. Let us have all the barber shops closed. Let us have the sales of Sunday papers discontinued,—the sales of brown bread and beans, and all such provisions.—Let us have the open bars for the sale of intoxicants closed, and let us have no travel, save for necessity or charity, on that day.

It is the intention of Mr. Stevens, after the removal of his soda fountain, to serve hot tea and coffee together with light lunches, such as sandwiches, etc., from his counters, on Sundays and other days. Why is not this a movement in aid of practical temperance work? And why ought he not to be sustained by the Women's Christian Temperance Union? There are hundreds of people every Sabbath in town who desire something to eat while waiting. Which is better, for them to get it of Geo. Stevens, or at the hotel, where is the added temptation that is not at the former place? Many of them are also thirsty. Is it better for them to drink soda, tea and coffee from the counter of Geo. Stevens, or rum from the hotel bar? Either place is convenient. Which shall be encouraged?

We repeat, that with the impartial enforcement of this Sunday law no one can take offense. But with its enforcement in one quarter only, there is reason, and good reason, for objection. Let us remember that hardly one of our citizens is exempt from violation of the strict letter of this Sunday law, as it stands on the statute books. "Let him that is without offense cast the first stone."

It is expected that the session of the Superior Court at Newburyport will adjourn to Salem next Monday, when probably there will be about forty people from this town naturalized.

Mr. Horace Wilson has bought out his brother's "Yankee notion" team and will go on the road. Mr. Fred C. Blake takes Wilson's place as clerk at B. F. Hutchinson's grocery store.

There was a small number in attendance at the meeting of the Essex Agricultural Society members at town hall last evening. Francis H. Appleton, the present trustee, was re-elected.

The County Commissioners visited town last week, and, with the selectmen, inspected the work of widening the road near Upton's Glue works.—They expressed their satisfaction with the work.

The oyster crop promises to be large this year and of fine quality. The cool season has been favorable to their growth, and they have an abundant food supply, which was not the case last year.

It looks as if our ice men would dispose of the whole of their stock in trade, and require as large a harvest next winter as the past. The demand for the congealed water has been brisk all summer.

The new postal notes are not handsome, but they will prove a very great convenience in transmitting small sums of money by mail, taking the place, and with greater advantages, of the old fractional currency.

Prohibitionists are requested to meet in the room of the W. C. T. U. on Saturday evening at 7.30 o'clock to choose delegates to the State Convention to be holden in Boston on the 20th inst., to choose a town committee and attend to other business.

It will be seen by the court record that James Claxton has been again imprisoned, this time for obtaining money under false pretenses. He sold one of our fish dealers what purported to be a bucket of clams, but on investigation it proved to be only a few clams on a lot of mud. It won't make much difference to Claxton, The last time he was sent down the county commissioners pardoned him out in less than a week.

The parade of the Grand Army Posts of Essex County at Marblehead to-day promises to be a gala day for the "boys." In the make up of the procession Union Post with Posts 5, 45, 39, 49, 99, 101, 44, 122, 151, 67 and 106 will form the second brigade under command of C. T. Batchelder with W. M. Ward and G. S. Brimmer as aids. Post 50 headed by the Salem Brass Band made a short parade about town this A. M. before leaving for Marblehead. They made a fine appearance and turned out some sixty men.

There have been several narrow escapes on the Salem & Lowell Railroad of late by the carelessness of the employes of that road at Endicott and Crowninshield streets. It has been the habit of the road when it had a freight train with cars for different tracks, to start ahead with the engine and one or two cars and leave the other cars to follow and be switched to tracks where they wanted them. A person passing would think that the train had passed and venture to cross the track. The Selectmen have notified the road that unless the practice is discontinued, they will be obliged to compel them to flag the crossings.

An entertainment will be given at Peabody Institute next Tuesday evening, Sept. 18, on which occasion Prof. Baker will present his unrivalled musical entertainment "An evening with Moore." In conjunction with this he will exhibit full size stereoscopic views of illustrious Irishmen of to-day, eloquently describing their struggles and success. The Professor in order to make the entertainment more pleasing and instructive, has procured some of our local talent, thereby making this the most enjoyable entertainment ever presented in the Institute. Tickets 25 and 35 cents can be procured at B. F. Stevens' book store and at the door on the evening of the concert.

The teacher who spends six hours a day with my child spends three times as many hours as I do, and twenty fold more time than my pastor does. I have no words to express my sense of the importance of this office. Still less have I words to express my sense of the importance of having that office filled by men and women of he purest motives, the noblest enthusiasm, the finest culture, the broadest charity, and the most devoted Christian purpose. A teacher should be the strongest and most angelic man or woman that breathes. No man living can do so much to set human life to a noble tune, no man living needs higher qualifications for his work.—Dr. J. G. Holland.

Affairs of state have moved on without a jar during the two week's administration of Governor Ames, while the chief executive in the costume of an ancient mariner, has been ploughing the briny deep. But for the newspaper announcements of the fact, the people would not have been aware of his absence. Mr. Ames' administration on this and other occasions has been highly satisfactory, and shows that it would be safe to trust the commonwealth to his care for a year at least. And if Governor Butler can be spared so frequently from the chair of state, it will not be difficult to persuade the voters that he can permanently be dispensed with without detriment to the public interests.—Lynn Union.

We see it announced that Billy Emerson, the well known minstrel, has purchased a large house and lot in San Francisco, 67x117 feet, for $25,000, and intends to convert it into a Home for Indigent Actors. There may be truth in it, and there may not. From our acquaintance with the gentleman and his idiosyncracies, it will take us a long time to believe that he contemplates any such philanthropic act, for two reasons: first, the distress of his fellow professionals has never been known to keep him awake at night, and, second, we don't believe he has $25,000.—Music & Drama.

Burglaries are so common in Massachusetts that a Naugatuck merchant has posted this on his safe: This is for fire only; our money is up at the house; come up. We have four shot guns, two rifles, three horse pistols and one revolver, all loaded and ready for use and warranted to kill at ten rods. Time spent here is wasted." Then follows the combination, so that if a burglar is determined to get in he can do so without breaking the lock.

IT IS said that Chas. W. Hidden, business manager of the Salem Post, has been representing himself as a state detective in order to terrorize one O'Hara of Salem into confessing knowledge concerning the mysterious Geo. K. Proctor tragedy. It will be remembered that Mr. Proctor was found shot dead in his cellar by a pistol found near him. The job seems to have been started by a clairvoyant and the romantic Charles proposed to follow the trail a la "Merciless Ben, the Hair Lifter." He made a misdeal however, for O'Hara is energetically seeking the punishment he deserves for falsely passing himself as an officer of the law. And let us hope that O'Hara will succeed, for if there is one man above another who ought to know better, and therefore thoroughly deserves punishment, it is a newspaper man who would make such a blanked fool of himself.—Chelsea Telegraph.

Carrie Swain, the actress, who is an expert swimmer, helped to save four drowning persons near New Haven the other day. She holds a medal given by the San Francisco humane society for her bravery in saving the life of a girl who was carried to sea by an undertow. She is also said to have rescued three bathers at Bayport, R. I., a few weeks ago.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The case of George Stevens on a complaint of keeping open shop on the Lord's day, came up by continuation yesterday morning before Justice Merrill. Sidney C. Bancroft and Frank E. Farnham appeared for the defendant. Chief of police Peasley testified that on Sunday the 2d instant he passed the shop several times; saw that it was open; saw people going in and out; the whole of the shop was open; he observed this several times during the day. On cross examination by Mr. Farnham he said he entered the shop more than once; the old shop and office were connected; he could not say how many were there; no one had suggested to him to take notice of the fact; he did not observe any baker's carts around on that morning; had observed them on other days, but not on that day; there was no one with him; he entered the waiting room; noticed passengers get out of the horse cars and go into the waiting room; saw them in the old shop, two or more; saw them sitting on the settee by the window; did not think the door to the old shop from the outside was open. Officer Pingree testified that he passed the shop about 12 o'clock on Sunday the 2d inst.; saw people coming out; and again at 5 o'clock; the shop was all open; he entered the place at 8.15 in the evening, and saw people in the old part; he would not swear that the old part was lighted up. This closed the evidence. Mr. Bancroft said he had agreed with Mr. Farnham to plead the case if Mr. F. would examine the witnesses, but he thought he had the best of the bargain, as there was not a particle of evidence introduced to show that Mr. Stevens had kept open shop within the meaning of the statute; there was no evidence that Mr. Stevens was present, or that anything was sold. Those who were present were waiting in the horse car station; the old door was locked, and because there was no partition, and those who were seen there crossed over the line, is Mr. Stevens liable to prosecution, when there is no evidence that there was any business carried on, but the evidence goes to show that they were there presumably for other purposes? Justice Merrill held that the proof of sales was not necessary; the fact that the door was open and people were seen coming in and out was evidence enough to convict, and he did convict, and fined Mr. Stevens $15 and costs. Mr. Stevens appealed, and gave bonds for $200 for appearance at the Superior Court, his boudsman being Kendall Osborn.

We lately visited the Serpentine quarry of the Lynnfield Verde Antique Company at Lynnfield Centre, and consider it well worthy the attention of the geologist, the capitalist, or the curious observer. We found there an immense hill of marble, including an area of many acres which must prove in the future, under judicious management, the foundation of a great industry and a princely fortune. Prof. N. S. Shaler of Harvard College has lately examined this quarry and contiguous territory, and made a carefully digested report in respect to the same. The Professor, who is high authority in such matters, is enthusiastic in his estimate of the value and extent of this quarry, and the magnificent results sure to follow the proper development of the enterprise. New York and Boston gentlemen are seeking an interest in this solid treasure-deposit of Lynnfield.—Wakefield Citizen.

The Republican Caucus was held Monday evening at Town Hall, for the purpose of choosing delegates to the Convention in Boston, Sept. 19th, and of choosing a town committee for the ensuing year. The meeting was called to order by F. Osborn, Jr., in the absence of Henry H. Proctor, the chairman of the town committee, and the caucus was organized by the choice of George Randall as chairman and Chas. H. Goulding secretary. The following delegates were chosen to the State Convention: Amos Merrill, F. Osborn, Jr., S. Edson Cassino, John P. Fernald, Francis H. Appleton, Warren Shaw. The new town committee was elected as follows: Alexander B. Merrill, Frank T. Arnold, J. Fred Ingraham, Bowman Viles, George M. Foster, George Randall, J. Fred Wiggin, George H. Poor, O. F. Newhall, Albert Vittum, G. Fred Osgood.

The tasteful way in which dealers in peaches, apples, pears and grapes arrange their wares, and the wonderful attractive appearance they make, induced a certain young man to invest in a basket. He says he overlooked the enormous amount of misery in reality concentrated in such articles at this season. While they presented the appearance of the healthful lusciousness, a little lower down was contained sufficient of the quintessence of colic and stomach ache to supply a whole family.

On Saturday last, Dr. B. F. Green, formerly of Lynn, was married to Miss Lizzie Hankinson of this city, the ceremony taking place at the residence of Dr. F. S. Worcester in Peabody, Rev. W. P. Chipman performing the rite. The bride was attired in a costume of black velvet, en train, heavily embroidered and decorated with flowers, with a floral coiffure. The gifts were numerous and valuable, a large number of them coming from the employes of the stitching-room of Morgan & Dore's manufactory, with which the bride was connected for thirteen years. Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Green have taken up their residence in Manchester, N. H.—Lynn Bee.

Our readers will observe by notice in another column that the firm of Gould & Stockwell has dissolved. Neither of these ladies, however, propose to retire from business, but Mrs. Gould will devote her entire attention to the fancy goods and notion department. She will put in a larger stock and endeavor to satisfy the wants of all her old customers and the public in general. Miss Stockwell will continue in Millinery, and will shortly announce an opening of Fall styles in hats and bonnets.—Both of these ladies are worthy the increasing patronage of our readers, which we trust they will receive.

The average school boys of to-day are as full of mischief as were their fathers before them! Last Saturday an old farmer left his team loaded with vegetables standing at a house in the vicinity of the square, when along came about twenty school boys and took possession of it. They filled up the seat and covered boxes and barrels, and patiently waited for the owner, who soon put in an appearance, when he was informed that the boys had invited themselves to take a ride. After reducing his load to about one half the number, the farmer drove off apparently contented.

Mr. Thomas E. Wilson has a fine Newfoundland dog about fourteen months old. It had become a great favorite with the family, being as gentle as a child. Yesterday morning he came home cut and bitten in a shocking manner and showed every evidence of a hard fight, his collar was gone, and he was bleeding in many places. It is supposed that some one stole him and matched him against another dog in a fight. Mr. W. would give a round sum for the conviction of the parties who did the cowardly deed.

Fifield & Smiley are doing a large provision business on Caller street, and in order to attend to their increasing trade are making improvements. The L of Mr. Fifield's house has been removed to the rear of the store, and will be used as a "trying out" house for lard. A large two story L is being built on the rear of the house, and the land where the old L was, will be utilized as a drive way to a new barn 30x50 feet, which will be built in the rear.

A trip of three days has been arranged to the White Mountains, by B. D. Hill, of this town, and Messrs. Nevins and Dennis, of Salem. They are to start Tuesday, the 18th inst., and return Thursday the 20th, visiting the Crawford and Franconia Notches, including the Flume, Pool, Basin, Bethlehem, Franconia and other spots.—The tickets which include all expenses are only $15.00. and as the number is limited an early application is desired.

When you see a boy on the distant hillside suddenly leap up into the soft summer air, holding one foot tenderly but firmly in the wedded fingers of both hands, while he hops around in irregular but excited orbits, at the same time voicing his grief with wailing shrieks mellowed by the sunny distance, then, without going to the telephone, you may know that barefoot boy has trod on the late autumn wasp that has lingered for the early frosts.

The St. John's C. T. A. Society have elected officers as follows: President, James Fennelly; vice president, John H. Murphy; recording secretary, James O'Connor; collector, Henry Claxton; corresponding secretary, Christopher Cahill; librarian, James McCarrick; treasurer, John Daley; Directors, John Duffy, Wm. Woods, John McLaughlin, Caleb Kirby, John Cahill; Investigating committee, Timothy Cunningham, Charles J. Houghton.

Too much cannot be said in condemnation of the habit—so common among women—of placing small coin between the teeth or lips while making change. It is dangerous; there may be nothing offensive in the appearance of the coin, and at the same time it may carry with it the seeds of contagion of the most deadly description. The same rule applies to anything which is passed promiscuously from hand to hand or mouth to mouth.

One day last week a milk man named Richardson from Danvers was driving along Tremont street, when the axle broke short off at the wheel, settling the driver in among the milk cans at the bottom of the wagon. The horse didn't offer to run, and a substitute wagon was soon procured.

The annual meeting of the Essex county Catholic total abstinence union was held at Danvers Tuesday. John H. Watson of Beverly was chosen president, James E. Williams of Lynn secretary and James Colgan of Salem treasurer. The ten branches of the Union reported a total membership of 1143, the sum of $17,000 in property and $3300 in cash. It was voted to have a county parade at Peabody, October 10.

As the team from Boston drew up to the new town hall last Saturday evening with the scenery, the driver as he alighted from the front of the wagon slipped and one leg went down between the cross bar and axle tree, and the other over the shaft. The horse began to kick and for a minute it looked as if the man would be seriously injured. A workman came to his relief and averted serious consequences.

A screaming freight train in passing the Lowell track last Thursday, wrought quite a disturbance among equines that were at the freight cars in the vicinity. One team started just as the driver was stepping in with an arm full of bark and he found himself and his burden in a heap on the ground. Another "kited off" up Central street and for a few minutes there was a general flurry.

A horse attached to a buggy, the property of Elbridge Rust, became frightened while standing in front of the Warren Bank, last Thursday, and ran away. He dashed up Lowell and Chestnut streets, where the buggy struck a post and he cleared himself. He started home with part of a shaft attached to him. He was badly cut and bruised, but not severely hurt.

Last Saturday on Upton street, Timmy Daley, ten years old, was taking filth from his pig pen and placing it under Mrs. Tobin's window. She naturally objected and desired him to remove it. He refused, and she then started out to remove it herself. Mrs. Daley interfered and Timmy struck Mrs. Tobin with a hammer. And a good old fashioned row followed.

Yesterday a young son of Mr. Thomas Durkee of West Peabody, while at play with some of his companions in the sheds at the schoolhouse, was pushed from a beam, falling several feet, striking upon his arm and throwing it out of joint. He was brought to a physician at the Square who soon righted the injury.

Mrs. Arthur Gosby, living on Jacobs street, while returning from an Eastern trip, lost her trunk. For five weeks past every effort has been made to find it and expressmen have been kept busy hunting it up. Yesterday it was found among a lot of unclaimed trunks at the station in Boston.

A fellow who had been on a drunk for several days had become so famished that he entered Sanger's fish market the other day, and while the clerk was waiting on a customer he commenced eating a lot of fish trimmings from a bucket, and also put a fish head in his pocket.

Mr. A. C. Osborne on Central street has probably one half a ton of grapes of different varieties on his vines. He has Stone's latest vine called the "Empire State," although it is not bearing this year. W. M. Ward also has one of these vines. They cost $5 a piece.

An exchange says: If the people would buy green coffee and brown it in their homes there would be fewer cases of diptheria, scarlet and typhoid fever. The aroma arising from the browning berry is one of the best agents in disinfecting buildings of impure air.

The excursion business over the Eastern Railroad is very large—in some instances the number of excursionists is actually greater than the road can furnish cars to carry. As usual at this time of year, the travel from the Mountain region is very large.

A son of P. McCaulif, living on Harris street, and only four years of age, pulled a lighted kerosene lamp from a table last Wednesday evening, breaking it in pieces and throwing the oil all over himself. Fortunately the lamp was extinguished in the fall.

President Goodell, of the Naumkeag Street Railway, gave the children connected with the almshouse a free ride on Wednesday. They were conveyed in a horse car over the entire main road and manifested great delight in this to them rare experience.

Mr. Mayhew S. Clark is building an office 22x30 feet and a story and one-half high for J. B. Thomas, in the yard opposite the slaughter house. He will also put up a building 25x66 in the rear of the stable on Oak street to be used as a store house.

William G. Kilham was drowned at Salem Neck last Friday evening, in stepping from the yacht Excelsior into a small boat, which was overturned.—Mr. Kilham was well known in town, having formerly been in the employ of A. F. Wheeler.

Mr. C. S. Goodridge of Lynn, the hat man, extends a special invitation to Peabody boys to drop in and see his stock of nobby hats at very low prices. Call in and get acquainted.

TIRED ALL OVER.
WHAT RESTED AND REFRESHED A WEARY MAN IN MEMPHIS.
"No, it never amounted to an acute pain, but continued to be a dull weary ache in the small of my back," writes Mr. Jas. Thomas, of No. 59 Madison street, Memphis, Tenn. "This was an old experience, and life became dull music. I was tired all over, with pain in the lower limbs, and a habit of lying awake nights. Recently I tried one of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS and was decidedly relieved within twenty-four hours. It may have been Providence that did the work, but I give the credit to Benson's porous plaster." Mr. Thomas' reverential idea does him credit, but Providence works by agents, and among them Benson's plaster ranks first as an external remedy. It acts quickly in relief and healing, and renders life better worth living. Price 25 cents. Look in the middle of the plaster for the word CAPCINE. Ask your physician about it. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Book Notices.

THE MUSICAL HERALD for September has for music, Blessed is the People, The Danube River, Vintage Time, and Responses to the Commandments; and a capital assortment of reading matter, at once entertaining, instructive and suggestive. Published in Boston at $1.50 a year, or 15 cents a number.

MAGNOLIA LEAVES, No. 4, is filled with interesting and entertaining matter, including several sweet little poems, several stories, sketches, etc., adapted for summer reading. These Magnolia Leaves will make quite an attractive volume when the six numbers are completed.—This monthly has been published for three years, and has been constantly improving.

FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE for October is peculiarly attractive, and altogether a most interesting and edifying number. A characteristic article by the editor (Dr. Talmage) "Shams in Religion;" No. XI. of "Religious Denominations in the United States—What is the Christian Church; or, Who are the Disciples of Christ?" "The Life and Character of General Robert E. Lee," are prominent articles, many of them finely illustrated. In the Home Pulpit is a Sermon by Rev. Dr. Talmage; and brief articles, paragraphs, and an entertaining and instructive miscellany make up this admirable number. Price 25 cts., or $3 a year, postpaid. Address, Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

The September MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY comes freighted with entertaining and instructive reading. It is one of the best numbers yet issued. The leading article is by Gen. John Cochrane, entitled "The Centennial of the Cincinnati," and is illustrated with portraits of several of the founders. The second article, "A Baltimore Penny," also illustrated, is an extremely interesting contribution from H. W. Richardson, of Portland, Me. The eminent historian, James Schouler, furnishes several charming pages on "Lafayette's Tour in 1824;" and Viator appears in an unpublished letter of Washington to Mrs. Richard Stockton. The departments of Notes, Queries, Replies, Societies, and Book Notices, are admirably well sustained. This magazine in becoming more and more valuable with each issue, and richly merits the high rank it has taken in periodical literature. Publication office, 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

HAY FEVER.—For twenty years I was a sufferer from Catarrh of the head and throat in a very aggravated form, and during the summer months with Hay Fever. I procured a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm and after a few applications received decided benefit—was cured before the bottle was used. Have had no return of the complaint. Charlotte Parker, Waverly, N. Y.

One and one-half bottles of Ely's Cream Balm entirely cured me of Hay Fever of ten years' standing. Have had no trace of it for two years. Albert A. Perry, Smithboro, N. H.

Since boyhood I have been troubled with Catarrh and Hay Fever, and have been unable to obtain permanent relief until I used Ely's Cream Balm. It has cured me. E. L. Clickener, New Brunswick, N. J. Price 50 cents.

New Yorkers, with magnificent condescension, discern merit in Boston, as they move toward the sea or the mountains. Our clean street-cars especially impress them, for in their own metropolitan vicinage many a car is doomed never to be clean, and has no sweetness to contribute to the strictly exclusive air. To ride in a car which offends no sense, and to be rarely called upon to witness brutality in passengers or officials—this is an experience which the crowded New York lines do not afford. The frog pond may be derided, and other precious possessions may be treated with levity, but our street-cars can claim a superiority which even the Knickerbocker acknowledges.—Boston Advertiser.

HOW HE DOUBLED HIS TRADE. — Mr. Benj. W. Paton, pharmacist, Globe Village, Mass., says that the miraculous pain-cure, St. Jacobs Oil, has greatly helped his other business, and the sales of the remedy have doubled in one month. He keeps a large supply always on hand. Officers of the Army and Navy pronounce St. Jacobs Oil to be the greatest pain-cure of the age.

A well-dressed youth recently entered a railway car, and passing by several containing each but one male occupant proceeded to where a young lady sat alone, and asked her if the vacant seat at her side was engaged. Answering in the negative, she offered him the inside seat near the window, which he graciously accepted; then she quietly picked up her satchel, and leaving him to his own reflections she sat with a lady behind her. The young man blushed to his ears, and those who witnessed his discomfiture smiled all all over their faces.

THAT DOUGHTY DUCHESS.

OPPOSITE OPINIONS ABOUT A WONDERFUL WOMAN—HER THUMB AND FINGERS.

"Crack nuts with her fingers? Why, you can't mean it!" cried a young lady graduate of the Normal College, in the utmost astonishment.

"But I do mean it," affirmed her big brother, who had taken several prizes in athletics, "and I re-assert it: that Cymburga, wife of Duke Ernest, of Austria, could crack nuts with her fingers and drive nails into the wall with her thumb."

"What a monstrous woman!" said the young lady. "What a useful woman," amended her big brother.

The Austrian Duchess was mighty because she kept good hours, good habits and perfect digestion.

Mrs. Alice Strong, of Pittsburg, Pa., writes a different story about herself, but deserves praise for her frankness. She says: "For the past three years I have been subject to severe attacks of colic and cramps, and exhausting attacks of Diarrhœa. Weary of experimenting with medicines, I turned, without hope, to PARKER'S GINGER TONIC. Three bottles cured me entirely. I have tried it also for other ailments with which women are often afflicted, and it far surpassed my expectations. I am happy to offer this testimony for the benefit of other women."

Ladies who are interested in Mrs Strong's letter, will please remark that PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of ginger. It cures colic easily, but by virtue of other rare and powerful ingredients, it also masters all diseases of the Blood—such, for example, as Rheumatism, Consumption, Scrotula, and all disorders of the Kidneys, Liver and Stomach. It is a vitalizer and stimulant, but not an intoxicant. Prices, 50 cents and $1 per bottle. Hiscox & Co., Chemists, New York.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—The following paragraphs concerning the early temperance reform, from a letter written by Mr. John B. Peirce, of Boston, seem worthy of publication. He thinks that Rev. Dr. Hewitt spoke in Danvers in 1826. There has been an impression that Dr. Nichols' Fast Day address of 1827 was the first advocacy of total abstinence ever made in town. I have disliked to rob our good old physician of his honors on this subject.

Mr. Pierce was a young man when the convincing argument of the orator changed his opinions, and as a successful business man, now crowned with his eightieth year, looks back with pride and rejoicing to these personally interesting events when he made his record for the cause of temperance.

M. O. STEVENS.
BOSTON, Aug. 30, '83.

MRS. MARY O. STEVENS.
Dear Madam,—Your note of 7th inst. reached me while away from home, and I have delayed answering, taking time to refresh my memory of the stirring times to which you refer. It was a long time ago and I have no written data to assist my memory, but some of the events to which you allude were so personally interesting to me I shall never forget them. It must have been the summer of 1826 instead of 1829, that the Rev. Dr. Hewitt visited old Danvers, and gave that temperance address at the old So. Church then in charge of Rev. Samuel Walker. It was a urgent and powerful appeal addressed to young and old, to the user and especially to the seller of intoxicating drinks, and with such effect in my case that I was thoroughly converted from a rum seller to a total abstinence man for life.

As I look back upon these events, I think this must have been a favorable time for the great reformation which then took place. For years the terrible evils of intemperance had been spreading through the community, and scarcely a family could be found which had entirely escaped its ravages. To say nothing of the old confirmed drinkers, the brightest and best of the young and middle aged (by the social customs of the day) resorted to the exhilarating cup on all occasions, and the family was considered mean and inhospitable, who did not keep on hand an assortment of intoxicating beverages for its guests. Of course scores went down and were swept away under the habitual use of these poisons, but it was considered a matter of course, and nobody blamed. Only an occasional remonstrance was heard either against the user, or the seller, and when any words of warning from the pulpit were heard, they passed by unheeded.

Dr. H. was a rousing and eloquent speaker, and his energetic, magnetic and convincing presentation of the subject caused a great sensation, I may say an awakening, from the apathy and indifference that had up to this time prevailed. Other lecturers were engaged, temperance societies were formed, the churches moved in the matter, the people were thoroughly aroused, and the reformation culminated in the Washingtonian movement, which spread and extended far and wide. In old Danvers both South and North Parishes, earnest efforts were made to induce the dealers to abandon the sale. Some of them stood out, but in the course of eighteen months one after another, they all surrendered, until not a store in town continued the sale, many farmers destroyed their cider presses, and some even cut down their orchards which bore only cider apples.

It is impossible to describe the happy effects which resulted from this great reformation. But, alas, the friends of temperance forget the old motto, that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty;" the battle won, the victory achieved, they rested upon their laurels, and the enemy, I mean the unscrupulous dealers, who could coin money out of the woes of widows and orphans, stealthily plied their trade, and gradually but surely the flood gates of intemperance were again opened, and the evil is still overwhelming its victims.

WORTH SAVING.—The vats of Shaw & Bros. at Vanceboro tannery contain about 500 tons of leather, and the tannery at Forest about 350 tons. The estimate of leather in the vats of the seven Maine tanneries belonging to the firm is 3,000 tons. If the leather be finished and sold at a fair market price it would bring 20 cents per pound on an average, and that would amount to about $1,200,000. — Brunswick Telegraph.

PLAIN WORDS

ARE BEST TO EXPRESS THE SUFFERING SO LONG ENDURED BY A MOST EXCELLENT LADY, MRS. G. FISHER, 29 CLARK ST., NEW HAVEN, CONN. HER KIND AND GRATEFUL EXPRESSION TOWARDS THE MEANS THAT AFFORDED RELIEF.

Facts clothed in plain words are best. Mrs. George Fisher lives in a pleasant cottage at 29 Clark St., New Haven, Conn She says: "I was a terrible sufferer from Liver disease for a period of twelve years. My family physician told me that it was chronic inflammation of the Liver. I tried a great many remedies recommended for liver difficulties. I was under the physicians' care a great deal, but could get no relief, until I began taking Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. I experienced relief at once, and to-day I'm enjoying good health through the use of this. I had also been a great sufferer from rheumatism in my limbs and shoulders, but I have been cured entirely through the use of FAVORITE REMEDY. I consider Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY a most excellent medicine. I know of many in this city who have received great benefit from the use of FAVORITE REMEDY. It is, sir, a good medicine. I know it, for I've tried it."

Mrs. Fisher is a lady of character and means what she says.

Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your Liver disordered? Have you derangement of the Kidneys or Bladder associated with Constipation of the Bowels? If so, you want Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Dr. Kennedy practices medicine and surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. Address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Letter from Venezuela.

CARACAS, July 30, 1883.

You cannot imagine the pleasure I felt when two copies of the PEABODY PRESS were put into my hands, also a Spanish edition of the Boston Herald. It seemed as though I had received a visit from old friends. I see by the above papers that you are sweltering with a superabundance of heat. Here it is considered very warm if we have eighty degrees Fahr. in the shade. In fact we enjoy here a perpetual spring; there is a variation of only 10° between the wet and the dry season. In the wet season we have a shower nearly every day which lasts about half an hour, and it rains a little occasionally in the dry season, with very heavy dews nights. The country looks bright and one would imagine that it was covered with a green Brussels carpet. The fair of the Centenary of Simon Bolivar, is now in full blast; it opened on the 24th of this month. On the morning of the 24th they began the ceremonies by the firing of cannons; at 10 o'clock, A. M., Te Deum in the church of Alta Gracia, when the Archbishop of Caracas officiated. The president of the Venezuela Republic, Guzman Blanco with his staff was present, also the envoys plenipotentiary and the consuls of the different countries. Afterwards different delegations of the several American Republics, with Guzman Blanco and his staff at their head, marched to the Plaza Bolivar, where an equestrian statue of the hero is erected. Speech-making was here first in order, and many fine tributes were paid to the memory of Simon Bolivar the Liberator. The column then proceeded to place in and around the statue the flowers with which it was laden, and various silken banners also were placed at the foot of the statue, the whole arranged so as to present a beautiful and magnificent sight. The troops had on their new uniforms that day and looked finely. The Plaza Bolivar is a large square situated in the centre of the city, and is planted with a choice selection of beautiful trees, such as Camboos, royal palms, mimoras, (the religious fig tree of India,) catalpas, cotton trees, besides an infinitesimal variety of smaller plants, which are the pride of the horticulturists; the whole presenting a marvel of tropical vegetation, in the centre of which stands the equestrian statue of Simon Bolivar, the Liberator of Venezuela, in whose honor the festivities were being held. A gorgeous banquet was the next thing in order for the government officials and invited guests. In the afternoon music and other entertainments were furnished to the populace on the various squares; they had also a bull fight which I witnessed, and I think it a horrible and barbarous custom, and ought to be stopped. In the evening all the places of public amusements, such as the Opera, Theatres, &c., were free to all the people, and the city was illuminated by the Brush electric light, which had just been imported, and the people here saw for the first time; and the day's festivities ended with a fine display of fireworks. On the 21st of July was the inauguration of the opening of the La Guayra and Caracas Railroad, a fine piece of engineering skill. The length of the road is only fifteen miles, but in some places it looks perilous for a train to run. The time that was made on the first train was two and a half hours. This road is built and owned by an English Company. There is another railroad on the opposite side of the city called the Ferro carril del Vaille, which is not yet finished, and is owned by a Belgian Co. It will run into the interior and tend to open up the country. On the 2d of August will be the opening of the National Exhibitions. I have a collection of 25 colored moroccos which are to have a place. I have seen the building and some of the exhibits, a few of which are very curious to me. There is a very wonderful exhibition of articles manufactured by the Indians of the upper Orinoco, and there is another very beautiful collection of wild animals, insects, reptiles, &c., of the country. There is near here a colony of 300 Americans. I shall leave here in about six weeks for British Guina from which place I shall write you again.

The iron steamer Sirius, in its trips from Boston to Portsmouth, is commending itself to many of our citizens. The trip is a fine one, the boat one of the best in our Boston harbor, and the officers kind and courteous. An hour or more is given to the passengers in Portsmouth, and the tickets are good until used, it being at the option of the traveller to remain over night in Portsmouth or to continue to the resorts in Maine. The boat leaves Liverpool wharf, next to the station of the Revere Beach R. R., daily at 9.30 A. M.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at Spaulding's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—I have been making an inspection lately of one or two seed farms which are well known to the farmers, and thinking, since so many of them read the PRESS, that a brief notice of these places might be of interest, I send you the following. One day last month in company with one of our veteran farmers, I rode to Essex to visit Aaron Low, who has been in the business about twenty years. His place is always in fine order and there is one piece in particular, four acres of squashes, which would delight the heart of any farmer; a few days afterward in company with the same gentleman, who probably does not object to being named, Mr. Daniel Buxton, Jr., I went to Middleton to visit the extensive farm of J. J. H. Gregory, the well known Marblehead seed man. He has over one hundred acres all in seeds. His success has seemed phenomenal, but the care and scientific knowledge displayed at the farm go far towards explaining it. Mr. G. escorted us during the forenoon, after which Foreman Carleton took us in charge. There is one lot of onions of five acres, from which the unusual yield of twenty-five hundred bushels is expected.

There are forty-eight men employed. We are indebted to Mr. Carleton for a bountiful dinner, for which our tramp over the place had given us a good appetite. Mr. Buxton, our companion, has been in days gone by a prominent seed raiser, but of late has enjoyed more of the ease he has faithfully earned. He still has a love for the soil and bestows great care upon his farm. We can vouch for the excellence of his beets, potatoes and other produce. It may not be amiss to say that all the gentlemen we have named are strong believers in the virtue of our friend Ames' phosphate, Mr. Gregory in particular using many tons. There is as much difference between a scientifically cared for farm and its modern implements, and an old fashioned farm, as there is between a Pullman car and the old stage coach. We think any of your readers would find it both profitable and interesting to visit any of these modern farms and can assure them that at either of the ones we have noticed, they would meet a cordial welcome.

CITIZEN.

THE CAMPAIGN against the rumsellers in New Bedford, as far as Mr. Barney is concerned has ended in a fizzle. He has "thrown up the sponge." This gentleman has experienced the difficulty which is felt everywhere, by the opponents of the traffic in intoxicants. The decisions of the Court there have been against him. In two, at least, of the cases, Mr. Barney has proved that the persons against whom he brought suit took out licenses the previous year, for the sale of liquor, and that they occupy the same quarters as when they obtained the license; that this year they have already paid a U. S. government license for that purpose; that fluids are exposed behind a bar, and that the places are open until nearly midnight; that a clerk is employed to be on duty during the time in which these saloons are open. Yet the Court has decided that all this is not reasonable evidence that the defendants are violating the law.

It is evident that in New Bedford, as well as elsewhere in the state, many professed temperance people do not wish the traffic in intoxicants stopped: in fact Mr. Barney openly states that his chief opposition has been from those who have been supposed to be temperance men. The political power which is exercised by the liquor dealers is very great; and the enforcement of any liquor law is almost an impossibility. In our own town, it has been shown that about as much liquor is sold under one law as another. And the man who believes that the provisions of the present law, in connection with the vote to grant licenses, are complied with or enforced, or that the sale of intoxicants is confined to the dealers who have received licenses, would be a fit subject for the lunatic asylum. It is much to be regretted that such a state of affairs exists. But Barney's fiasco in New Bedford has shown the power of this traffic, and the weakness of any man to cope with it.

Fiske of the Palmer Journal has been chosen cashier of the national bank in that place. It's the only case of the kind on record. We refrain from any further comment, the theme being too awfully solemn for any profanation at our hands. A newspaper editor transformed into a bank cashier. Well, well—the leopard can change its spots, and the day of miracles is not passed.—Milford Journal.

Adding injury to insult: A tall, stylish looking woman, leading a greyhound, passed the balcony of a Saratoga hotel, on which two gentlemen were standing. "What a beautiful creature," said one of them in a voice which proved loud enough for her to hear. Turning very red in the face she glanced angrily at the speaker and said: "You have no right to insult me, sir." "Excuse me, madam," he replied, "but you flatter yourself. I was alluding to your dog."—Brooklyn Eagle.

FIRE DEPARTMENT NOTES.

There is some talk of a Firemen's muster, to be held at the Danvers Trotting Park some time in October, under local management.

At the meeting of the Engineers, last Wednesday evening, the Chief was instructed to purchase one thousand feet of new hose, and to use his own judgment in the brand.

An alarm was given a few minutes after 12 o'clock on Sunday morning for a slight fire in a barrel of rubbish in the rear of the Reporter office. The department were quickly on hand, and Hose 2 was ordered to lay a line and wet down the premises. Officer Jones discovered the fire and gave the alarm, after trying to extinguish the blaze. The Hook and Ladder truck was the first out of the house. The fire was probably set, and adds another to the list for this year, of incendiary fires. If the firebug is ever caught, he or they, as the case may be, ought to be treated to a little of "Texas justice."

We give below the list of the first Hook and Ladder company in this town. It is taken from the original copy of the company roll, now hanging in the room of the Abel Proctor H. & L. Co.:—

The following list of individuals are duly appointed by the Firewards of the town of Danvers, as the Danvers Hook and Ladder Co. No. 1.

Gilman S. Low,	Joshua Marston,
Amos King, 3d,	P. R. Southwick,
	Benj. F. Rodgers.

The H. & L. company voted to give Richard Keefe $7. for injuries received at the Osborne fire, being the amount due him from the Proctor fund. Had Mr. Keefe been a member of the Relief Association he would have received the same amount from that, as per By-Laws, Art. 7th, Section 3d, "To any member of this Association, who, on account of injury to his limbs or health received in the discharge of his duty as a member of the Peabody Fire Department, is prevented on account of said injury from resuming or engaging in any employment, he shall as by vote of the Board of Trustees, receive the sum of seven dollars per week; it being understood, that the members are not entitled to benefits for injuries received after roll call, or after dismissal by the officer in command."

Assistant Foreman Wilson of the Truck is going on the road with dry goods and small wares.

Samuel G. Southwick, of Hose 1, and wife are spending the week at Hampton Beach.

Quite a number of the "boys" are going to Reading to witness the trial of the new Button steamer, built for that town, on Thursday.

Edward Flynn, fireman of steamer 2, has been appointed Chief Marshal of the parade of the Essex County Catholic Societies, in this town, Oct. 10th.

The Fire Engineers, of Wakefield, are talking up the idea of getting a drop collar and harness for the steamer horses. It would certainly lessen the number of minutes in getting to a fire.

Mr. Ira Cheeney, of Hose 1, was united in marriage last week to Miss Mary Fairbrother. The happy couple have the best wishes of the firemen for their future prosperity.

Hose 3 have just hung a crayon picture of the late Eben A. Hooper, in their hall. It is from the studio of Bushby, of Boston.

A handsome whip will be offered at the fair of Hose 4, to any driver that may secure the greatest number of votes. ZERO.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Mr. David Twiss lost a valuable horse last week.

Mrs. Chas. Shaw has gone to Maine to spend her vacation.

Miss Viola Putnam is stopping at Juniper Point with Mr. and Mrs. Colwell.

Mr. W. A. Giles has improved the looks of his place on Lynn street the past week, by fencing.

It is stated that the health of the Rev. C. C. Carpenter is so poor as to oblige him to take a voyage across the water to Labrador.

Mr. I. H. Beede has made decided improvements in his property on Lynn street, by the grading of the sidewalks the whole length of his line.

Mr. John Green has accepted a position as driver on the Lynn and Boston R. R.

Fred Curtis is improving the looks of his house on Lynn Street, with four light windows.

Rev. J. W. Colwell and family will occupy the Flag Cottage at Juniper Point two weeks, after which they will visit Andover and Providence, R. I.

A large turtle was captured Monday morning near Perkin's pond, Lynnfield, and was taken to Boston on Conductor Skinner's train on the Boston & Maine railroad. He measured nearly 12 inches across the back, and nearly 2 feet from the mouth to the extreme end of his tail. The weight was exactly 18 pounds.

It isn't exactly landscape painting, but the landscape in the vicinity of the ice houses has been painted in the interest of Frank Cousins' Salem Bee Hive.

While crossing High street on Monday forenoon, a boy named Griffin came near meeting with what might have been a serious mishap. An unruly cow belonging to a man named McCarthy caught him in her horns and tossing him, made a second pass for the child, when people in the vicinity interfered and prevented her carrying out her designs. Such animals should not be allowed on the street.

One day last week Mr. Zachery Goodridge of Revere, who formerly lived in Peabody, visited Emmerton's cider mill, and shortly after leaving it the transient bolt to his wagon was broken and he was thrown in a heap on the ground. The next that he remembers he found himself in his team at Baldwin's corner. How he came there and who assisted him he don't recollect.

About 10 o'clock last Friday evening, as a man named Daniel Cosgrove was walking up Washington street and when near the burying ground, he was pushed off the sidewalk by two rowdies. He remonstrated when one fellow rushed at him, but was met with a stunning blow on the side of the head which sent him staggering into the road way. The rowdies then made off as some parties came in sight. What the object was is not known, as Cosgrove carries no money.

WHAT OUR BOY SAYS.

That Marblehead is a great country for clubs.

That there is a watermelon club, a cucumber club, and perhaps a cabbage head club.

That that comes of having a famous seed man in town.

That his girls sister wanted to borrow him to go to a party.

That his girl said she guessed not as "it was not good for man to be a loan."

That Fifield & Smiley have some large cucumbers.

That size on cucumbers don't count.

That he has seen very small ones that have expanded an ordinary stomach to an acher.

That Mark Allen of the Woburn Advertiser has a patent medicine cough lozenge.

That he will know the feelings of editors when he asks for the top of column next to reading matter.

That he saw Chas. D. Howard at the Republican caucus last Monday.

That he wondered who promised him an office this time.

That he wonders if he would have been a Republican if Editor Litchman hadn't got the office he (Howard) wanted.

That he is now studying medicine when the Boss is not looking at him.

That from the book he learns that eating cooked fruits, preserves and all glucoses not eaten in the natural way is harmful.

That they cause undue rapidity of proliferation of the lymph cells, thus bringing on that state of engorged lymph channels with enlarged glands, commonly called "the strumous diathesis."

COMER'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE which has a world-wide reputation, is doing a larger business than ever before. It has had for its students some of the smartest and most prominent business men in this country, who speak in the highest terms of this model institution.

We never buy 3 dozen peaches for a quarter out of a fruit wagon but we inwardly resolve never to do so again, but we forget our resolve and get beaten every time.—Woburn Advertiser.

Governor Butler's stables are the finest in Lowell. He keeps nine thoroughbred horses.—N. Y. World.

Mr. David Conrad, at the Pavilion, Salem, has made arrangements to supply all demands for those Jerseys which are so popular with the ladies. He has a full line at the very lowest prices, and our lady readers will do well to look in at his store.

What D. N. GRIFFIN, dealer in Clothing, Hats, Caps and Gents' Furnishing Goods says about it:

D. N. GRIFFIN, Beverly.

I have been acquainted with B. F. RAYMOND for five years and have always found him a man of unimpeachable character, and business integrity. What can be said of him can be said of his medicine, there is no humbug about it. DANIEL W. BARTLETT, Chairman Selectmen, Essex.

WALTER FLINT, 29 Federal St, Beverly, Mass., says: "I had measles very badly this last winter. Was left with a bad cough and very weak. After staying at home for several weeks, after getting out of doors, I commenced to go to school. Cough was so bad and strength so poor that Physician ordered me to leave school. I took a great deal of medicine, but nothing seemed to help me. Cough seemed to grow worse instead of better. Some one recommended Sarsaparillian Hygienic Wine. I tried it, and before I had taken one half a bottle, I was back to school, and cough was better. After taking whole bottle, cough was entirely cured, and felt strong and hearty."

$1.00 per bottle; 6 bottles for $5.00.

Choir Practice.

She sat on the steps of the organ loft
Just after the second hymn,
And through nave and choir to the cool gray spire
The sound rose faint and dim,
As they settled themselves in the church below
For the sermon that followed next,
And I seated myself by the alto's side,
As the parson took his text.

I marked the tender flush on her cheek,
And the gleam of her golden hair,
The snowy kerchief 'round her neck,
And her throat all white and bare—
A throat so white that indeed it might
An anchorite entice,
And I faintly heard the parson's word
As he preached of paradise.

My arm stole gently 'round her waist
Until our fingers met,
And a flitting blush made the tender flush
Of her cheek grow deeper yet.
Snowy and fair the hand beneath,
And brown the palm above,
And the brown closed softly o'er the white
As the parson spoke of love.

Ah, who is wise when deep blue eyes
Meet his and look coyly down?
Who would but drink, nor care to think
Of envy's jealous frown?
'Twas but to bend till I felt her breath
Grow warm on my cheek, and then
My lips just softly touched her own
As the parson said Amen!

Twenty-One.

BY S. M. KIMBALL.

I miss the patter of little feet
Upon the kitchen floor,
And the roguish little rap-a-tap
Falling upon the door,
And the eager shout of wild delight,
As, opening it, I espied
A bright, mischievous, childish face,
Brown-cheeked and sunny-eyed.

I miss the hungry call for bread;
The "Mother, I want a string!"
The balls to cover, the kites to paste,
The bells on the sled to ring,
The garments torn in the daring climb,
The shouts of exultant glee,
And the headstrong, boyish wilfulness,
That sometimes fretted me.

I miss the noisy, boisterous laugh,
The merrily-whistled tune,
The song that seemed to my mother-ear
As sweet as a bird in June;
I miss a form bent by my knee
As the bedtime-hour drew near,
And a murmuring voice that softly said
Our Father's blessed prayer.

Later, I miss at evening-time
A boy with his slate and book,
The pencil-click, and the thoughtful-face
With its sober, earnest look;
The flash of triumph, as, fair and white,
The conquered problem stood,
And the boyish words of victory,
"I've got it, mother! Good!"

All that I miss I cannot tell,
For many, many a thing
Flashes between me and my work
On memory's flitting wing;
The roguish hands, the tattered clothes,
The thoughtful face are gone.
"Dead," did you ask, sir; no, thank God,
But you see, he's "twenty-one."

Twenty-one, sir, out in the world—
Out in the din and strife.
Doing his part with a sturdy will,
Of the earnest work of life;
He comes, a man with firm, quick step,
And I kiss him at the door,
But my little, make-believe-company boy
Will come to me no more.

Father in Heaven! O let me bring
One prayer to Thee to-night;
May his life's problem stand at last
Right-solved, and pure and white.
Give or withhold the world's poor wealth,
But the love, the light, the joy
Of a noble, honest, Christian life,
Grant thou unto my boy.

Selected Story.

Like Man, Like Husband.

Mr. Marcus Wilkinson sat alone in his office with a dainty little perfumed note between his fingers and a puzzled frown upon his brow. The note, directed in a graceful feminine hand, was brief:

DEAR GUARDIAN:—I will be at the office at 10 in the morning to consult you upon a matter of importance. NELLIE.

'A matter of importance,' muttered Mr. Wilkinson, twisting the note nervously. 'Can my fears be true? Has Cyril Ormsby proposed to my pearl? I am afraid he has And what can I say? What can I urge against the man, if Nellie's own instincts have played her false? Ten o'clock!'

The last silvery stroke of the mantel clock had not died away when the door of the office was opened by a clerk, and Nellie Bentley entered the room.

Just a few words to describe the ward of whom Marcus Wilkinson always thought as a pearl, a lily, everything pure and fair. She was of medium height, slender and graceful with a thoughtful face of exquisite beauty.

Very young, only 18, Nellie Bentley had borne early the sorrows of life. Her father, having been wealthy, had failed in business and committed suicide. Her mother, delicate and helpless, had fought poverty feebly for two years, and sinking under privation and toil, had contracted a fatal disease. When all hope of life was over, news came that Nellie's uncle, dying abroad, had left a large fortune to his only sister. A will was made by the dying woman leaving her own too lately won independence to Nellie, and appointing their old friend, Marcus Wilkinson, guardian to the heiress.

Sorrowing, and womanly beyond her years, Nellie had turned from her own grief to a noble endeavor to solace some of the trials of those with whom her own poverty had made her familiar. A cousin had come at Mr. Wilkinson's request to make a home for his ward, and she resumed many long interrupted studies. But a large portion of her time was spent in the humble homes of those who had been her mother's friends in the dark days of widowhood, and her gentle charities soon extended far beyond this small circle.

She had been an orphan for two years on the day when she came to seek Mr. Wilkinson, as already described, and the sorrows of her life had lost some of their bitter sting, leaving only a gentle sadness behind.

'Well, Nellie,' the old gentleman said, 'what brings to me the pleasure of seeing you to-day?'

'It is about myself,' Nellie said, the softest rose tints flushing her cheeks.

'Dear me! I didn't know you ever took such an insignificant person into consideration at all.'

'Now, Uncle Marc, please don't tease.'

'She wants something enormous,' said the old gentleman, mentally addressing the walls.

'Whenever I am Uncle Marc I know what to expect next.'

But just then the kindly man detected signs of trouble in Nellie's face, and the jesting voice was turned at once to one of tender gravity.

'What is it, my child?'

'Cyril Ormsby came to see me last evening, and he will come here to-day; but I wanted to see you first. He wants me to be his wife, Uncle Marc, and'—she hesitated here—'you do not like him.'

'Who told you that?'

'No one; but I see for myself.'

'Well, you are right. I do not like him; but my like or dislike has no control over you.'

'No control!' Nellie's voice was piteous. 'Please don't talk so. I come to you as I would have come to my father.'

'There, dear, I was wrong. Tell me, then, as you would your father; do you love Mr. Ormsby?'

'I think he's the noblest man I ever knew. If you could see him with some of my poor people, how gentle and courteous he is, you would like him, too. He has given me so much sympathy in my work, Uncle Marc, feeling, as I do, that the possession of great wealth is but a stewardship.'

'And so won your love?'

'My respect and admiration, uncle. I cannot yet realize that a man so noble and so good can really desire my companionship and help in his life. But, since he does, I am glad and proud to have won his confidence.'

'Hem—yes! Enthusiastic, but heart-whole,' was Mr. Wilkinson's mental comment. 'Suppose you and I go for a walk?' he added aloud.

'A walk?' Nellie said in a tone of surprise.

'Yes. I have a friend or two I should like to have you see. When we come back I will tell you why I dislike Cyril Ormsby, if,' he added mentally, 'you have not already found out.'

It was not exactly such a walk as one would have mapped out for a gentleman's invitation to a young, beautiful girl, but Nellie followed its course, leaning upon her guardian's arm, wondering a little, but never hesitating, past the respectable portion of the city to a quarter known as the 'Factory Row,' a place where Mr. Wilkinson had never before allowed his ward to go, for there were apt to be fevers and contagious diseases lurking there. It lay low and was unhealthy, and the houses were of the meanest description.

'For a noble philanthropist, partly owning these factories and this quarter, Mr. Ormsby seems neglectful,' said Mr. Wilkinson dryly. 'I have an interest in the factories, as you are aware, but do not own one of those wretched houses. They are all Cyril Ormsby's.'

'But,' Nellie said eagerly, 'these people will not let him benefit them. They use his charity for drink; they abuse any privilege he gives them, till he is discouraged in his efforts to do them any good.'

'Oh, step in here.'

It was a poor place, scantily furnished, and cheerless. Upon a cot bed a woman lay in the last stages of consumption. She looked up eagerly to Mr. Wilkinson.

'I hope you are better,' he said kindly.

'No; I shall never be better. If I may only die in peace; it is all I ask.'

'Mr. Ormsby will not disturb you now!'

'Jennie has gone to him. Yesterday he sent word that if the rent was not ready to-day at 12, out we must go. I've paid it regularly for five years, but he don't think of that. All Jennie's made the last month she has had to pay for fire and food. She's but 15 and her pay is small.'

'What do you owe Cyril Ormsby?'

'Thirty shillings!'

'And if he is not paid to-day, he will put you out in the streets to die?'

'He says the workhouse is the place for paupers.'

At this moment a slim, pale girl of 15 came in, crying bitterly.

'Mr. Wilkinson was out,' she began, and then, seeing her visitors, she cried eagerly: 'Oh, Mr. Wilkinson, you will not let mother be put in the street. I'll pay every penny, sir, if you will only wait till she is better and I can get my full time to work.'

'Have you seen Mr. Ormsby to-day, Jennie?' the old gentleman asked.

'Yes, sir. He said he had no time to hear any whining. The agent will be here at 12, and if the money is not paid he will put us out.

'May I?' whispered Nellie.

'Just as you please, my dear. Perhaps this dying woman or child will drink up your charity.'

'Hush! hush!'

So tenderly, so delicately Nellie gave her charity, that there was only deepest gratitude awakened without the galling sense of obligation. She left more than sufficient for some weeks, and promised to send delicacies for the invalid.

No word of herself passed her lips until they were once more in the narrow street.

'Oh, Uncle Marc,' she said, 'can it be true that he is so hard, so false to me.'

'Wait,' was the brief reply.

They went into the wide courtyard in whose space stood the four great factories, the joint property of Marcus Wilkinson and Cyril Ormsby, long before divided by the entirely opposite management of these two into distinct departments—one entirely under the control of the elder, the other of the younger man.

'Wilkinson's absurd soft-heartedness,' as Cyril mentally characterized it, had made this division absolutely necessary.

But it was not into his own kindly-governed, well-ordered departments that Marcus Wilkinson led his ward. He turned into a small room where a pale man was busily writing and at the same time overlooking a long room, where about seventy girls were at work before busily whirling machinery.

'Good morning, Watkins,' the old gentleman said. 'I was in hopes that you were taking a holiday.'

'Thank you, sir,' was the reply, in a dejected tone. 'I can't well quit work, sir. There's the wife and six little ones, you see.'

'Have you told Mr. Ormsby the doctor says that your life depends upon a few weeks of rest and pure air?'

'Yes, sir. He's not keeping me; but he says if I go he must fill my place, and that means starvation for my family. I could never get a new situation as feeble as I am now.'

'How long have you been here, Mr. Watkins?'

'Seventeen years, sir. I was with old Mr. Ormsby before you came, sir.'

'A faithful servant seventeen years!' said Mr. Wilkinson, in a low tone; 'and a few weeks' rest may save his life!'

At this moment Nellie shrank a little nearer her guardian. Through the window, from which Mr. Watkins overlooked the long room, she could see Cyril Ormsby, walking briskly about, his voice harsh and imperative, finding fault here and there and keenly scrutinizing every item of the work. Not a face in the long room was brightened by the presence of the master. Fingers worked more rapidly, eyes were fastened persistently upon the looms, and every one seemed aware of a stern taskmaster's gaze. But Mr. Wilkinson obeyed the mute petition expressed in the looks of his ward, and led Nellie out into the wide passage again, to another workroom.

It were too tedious a task to follow every step of these two as they passed from room to room, everywhere meeting some assurances of Mr. Wilkinson's own hold upon the hearts of the 'hands,' and their terror of Cyril Ormsby's harshness.

Out again among the squalid houses, where her guardian had no control, but bestowed his kindly charity without ostentation; and here more eloquently than ever, Millie heard how cruel a mockery were the schemes of charity and philanthropy that had been poured into her ear. It needed no spoken words from her guardian to tell her that the noble words uttered to win her were but those of hypocrisy, which knew how it could best plead its cause with her.

One and another, turning to Mr. Wilkinson as to a friend, unaware of the torture of their words to the kindly lady beside him, told of the cruel exactions of work in sickness or trouble, of closest calculation of time, of small wages and heavy rents.

'If we won't live here and pay, we get no work in the factories,' one said, when asked why he did not seek a more healthy quarter.

'I am doing overtime to pay for my child's funeral,' one said, 'for I lost the wages for three days I stayed by to see her die, and to bury her.'

'I'm uneasy about the rent,' another said, 'for I lost a week by a fall upon the ice, and it's hard making it up again.'

Not one word of kindly sympathy, of help, in trouble or sickness. The 'hands' under Cyril Ormsby were simply human machines to do so much work, sick or well, or pay the price of an hour or day of idleness, no matter how necessary.

There was no word spoken as Mr. Wilkinson and Nellie walked to the office again. Once there, the old gentleman spoke very gravely. 'As your guardian, Nellie, I can speak to you no word against Cyril Ormsby. He is a rich man of good, social position, of irreproachable moral reputation, and a man whose standing in business circles is the highest—a man who is a good match in every worldly sense. So much for your guardian. As your friend, my pearl who loves you as your own dead father might have loved you, who knows every noble impulse of your pure soul—as that friend, I tell you I would rather see you lying beside your mother than the broken-hearted wife of such a man as Cyril Ormsby.'

'I came to you as a friend, as almost a father,' said Nellie, 'and I thank you for keeping me from a life-long misery. To know my husband such a man as I now know Cyril Ormsby to be, would, as you say, break my heart.'

'I would not tell you,' said her guardian, 'for you knew I disliked him, and might have thought that dislike prejudiced me. But, Millie, tell me you will not let this day's work shadow your life. You did not love Cyril, Nellie?'

'No, I reverenced what I believed a noble, generous nature. That reverence a mockery, I shall never break my heart for a man I thoroughly despise, Uncle Marc.'

And so it happened that Cyril Ormsby, coming to claim the fortune he believed to be within his grasp, met only Mr. Wilkinson, with Nellie's polite but distinct refusal to resign herself or her fortune to his keeping.

But he never knew how Nellie learned the true value of his hollow words of charity and philanthropy.

Miscellaneous.

A RINGING RAILROAD ORDER.—We have no doubt whatever that the highest and best interests of the country would be greatly subserved, and that on the whole, it would be a great blessing to the entire community everywhere, if all the railroad superintendents of the land would issue such an order as the following from President Bennett H. Young, of the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago line, sent out for the control of its various employes:

In the future operations of the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railway, it is directed that, so far as possible, no work be done, or trains be run, upon the Sabbath day. In case of perishable goods or live stock, it may be necessary to do some work, but you will avoid this where it can be safely and properly done.

You will in future run no excursion trains of any kind for any purpose on the Sabbath. This order applies to camp-meeting trains. If Christian people cannot find other places for worship, this company will not violate divine and civil laws, and deny its employes the essential rest of the Sabbath, to carry them to camp-meeting ground. I am also informed that a number of the company's employes have conscientious scruples against any work on the Sabbath. There are likely others who do not feel so strongly on this subject. Under no ordinary circumstances must any employe who objects on grounds of his religious convictions be ordered or required to do any service on the Sabbath. If any difficulties arise in the execution of this regulation, you will please report them to me for consideration, and you will also notify employes of their right, on conscientious grounds, to be fully protected in the observance of a day of rest.—Congregationalist.

We publish the following from the Wakefield Citizen and Banner, at the request of Mr. Buxton, our oldest citizen. Mr. Buxton has in his possession the autograph of Mr. Pevear, written by him, without the aid of glasses, at the remarkable age of 103 years. He certainly presents a wonderful example of longevity:

Mr. Phillip Pevear of Sedgwick, Me., is one of the most remarkable men in New England, when we consider his great age and the excellent preservation of his bodily and mental powers. He was born in Hampton Falls, N. H., Dec. 8, 1779, and has consequently reached the mature age of one hundred and three years and nine months, and is as active as a man of seventy-five years. He has been lately visited at his home by Mr. and Mrs. Ralph E. Woodward, Mrs. Woodward being a daughter of the old gentleman. He started out for a walk of a mile and a half to meet his guests at the steamer's wharf in Sedgwick, but obtained a friendly lift which saved him half the distance. At a family reunion a few days later a grandson struck up "Yankee Doodle" on the parlor organ, whereupon the brisk centenarian felt his youth renewed and with Mrs. Woodward, a grand-daughter and a great grand-son for partners, danced successive reels with the grace and agility of a young man. His good eyesight was demonstrated by his threading a fine needle with silk without glasses. He is able to do considerable light work about the home premises, such as cutting firewood, gardening, picking berries, etc. Mr. Pevear, it should be mentioned, has long been and is a strictly temperance man, having indeed seceded from the Baptist church because wine was used at communion, though it must be confessed he has for many years been a smoker of tobacco.

A newly-married couple went to live with their grandmamma at Studley, Eng. The old lady had been accustomed to sit all day in an old, stuffy armchair. She was out of the way, one day and the young people packed the chair off to the upholsterer's to be repaired. On grandma's return, she immediately missed the chair and eagerly inquired for it. "Oh, I've sent it away to be cleaned," said the dutiful Dorothy. "What," shrieked the horrified old lady; "there was four hundred pounds in the seating." A messenger was immediately despatched to the upholsterer's for the chair, and it was returned with the treasure-trove safely deposited in the seating. Soon after that an old petticoat was foraged out and consigned to the rag-bag, but the old dame rescued that, and displayed to her astonished granddaughter a large number of sovereigns sewed in the waistband.

COMPARATIVE WORTH OF BAKING POWDERS.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS
As to Purity and Wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances. E. G. LOVE, Ph.D."

"It it a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure." "H. A. MOTT, Ph.D."

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious substance. HENRY MORTON, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer, Mass."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

NOTE.—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A one pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength are to be avoided as dangerous.

1 Like an Evil Spirit.

In olden times it was thought that evil spirits came in through cracks and keyholes. The generally approved way to keep them out was to plug up the keyholes and stop the cracks with cotton. Notwithstanding these preventive measures, the evil things had their own way and often came in as they pleased.

So comes malaria now-a-days. We try to keep it out of the keyhole and it comes in by the crack. We stop up the crack, and lo! it comes from a leak in the plumbing, or an opening from some neglected drain, or from some unsuspected source and unguarded direction.

We cannot always keep malaria out, but we can give it battle and drive its effects from our systems. If BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is taken in time, malaria has not a ghost of a chance. This is the great family medicine. Your druggist sells it, and you ought to keep a bottle in the house.

After a lunch cars will be taken for the Willows, where at 4 o'clock P. M. the City band of Albany will give a concert for two hours. They will have supper at 7, and after supper another concert will be given. The street railway company will give a fine display of fireworks in their honor. A set piece, emblematic of the two encampments, will be given.

Henry P. Ives has published a neat pocket guide to Salem, containing a brief history of the city, time tables, and other information. Price 10 cts.

The lawyers of this city have organized a base ball club, as follows: P. J. McCusker, captain and short stop; C. A. Weare, first base; Richard E. Hinds, second base; A. P. White, third base; M. P. Mr. E. A. Simonds has a full line of crockery and housekeeping goods, and a brilliant assortment of apparatus for shedding light upon the home.

Brother Shaw of Peabody held a gospel temperance meeting at the Willows Sunday.

Dr. Loring has lost a valuable Ayershire cow.

W. B. Ferguson and Chas. Odell have bought the land off Bridge street, on the Pierce & Wait estate, which they will at once fence in, grade, and put in order for lawn tennis, base ball and riding. It is a good location, and the gentlemen are admirably adapted to manage such a piece of property.

The Calvary Baptist Church has extended a call to Rev. Mr. Holmes, of Michigan, to become their pastor. He formerly preached in Lynn.

Mr. Archer, the new reporter for the Boston Journal, still retains his old position on the Salem Gazette.

The late E. K. Noyes was a member of Essex Lodge, I. O. O. F., having joined the order in 1846. A delegation from the Lodge attended his funeral last Friday.

John P. Peabody has considerable to say this week about new goods. His counters are full of novelties, and it will pay the readers of the PRESS to read his advertisement and visit his store.

The remarkable success of Almy, Bigelow & Webber, is owing to the boldness and magnitude of their operations. Quantity is never an object with them if the price is right. They call attention to-day to a special sale of carpets at astonishingly low prices. Housekeepers, hotel proprietors, and those in charge of public buildings, will for a short time be able to obtain unusual bargains.

The Republican city committee held a large and enthusiastic meeting Monday evening and organized as follows: Chairman, Robert S. Rantoul; Secretary, John P. Peabody; Treasurer, C. H. Pinkham, Jr.; Finance and Executive Committee, Frank T. Berry, Andrew J. Frisbee, John P. Peabody, Hubbard Breed, N. B. Perkins, Jr., Joseph N. Peterson. Ward Officers: Ward 1, Chairman, John H. It is rumored that the commission of Lewis A. Manning, as district police, has been revoked by Gov. Butler—presumably, if correct, for his connection with the Hidden—Proctor—O'Hara affair. Ex-City Marshal Shaw, of Lynn, will take his place.

The horse cars will leave the City Hall every half hour between 1 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon for Harmony Grove.

The choice of a music teacher in the public schools seems to give the school committee much trouble. An attempt at a choice was made again Monday evening, but without success.

LYNN.

The contract for repairs and improvements at the Almshouse and Children's home has been awarded to the firm of Hatch & Fernald, rear of 159 Broad street.

The box cars on the Lynn & Boston horse railroad have made their appearance, which is a sign of approaching change in the weather. We doubt if any one watches the weather reports any closer than Amos F. Breed, and there is no one who can truthfully say that Mr. Breed is negligent or indifferent concerning the health of the many people who patronize the cars. Mr. Breed has not only made this road a paying investment for its stockholders, but ever since his management began he has met the wants of the people to the fullest extent, and by good judgment and untiring zeal has greatly improved this popular mode of city travel, so that at present there are but few roads in this vicinity that are conducted equal to the Lynn & Boston horse railroad.

A gentleman from this city says that the light, soft air to be found among the pines in Lynnfield is as good a time as can be found. The only objection to Lynnfield is, that it overdoes the thing in the matter of appetite. This works the kitchen department so hard that ladies get no vacation.

Joseph A. Halliday, residing at 392 Western Avenue, cut his throat last Saturday. He has two sisters who are insane, and have been cared for by him for a year. They have been sent to the Danvers Asylum. Halliday was a member of Gen. Lander Post G. A. R. Insanity is hereditary in the family.

Daniel W. Rose, a member of the Wooldridge Cadets, died of typhoid Fever last Friday.

The city officials visited the Danvers Asylum last week, and found the twenty-four insane wards in that Institution in good condition and well cared for.

The Sunday train over the Eastern Railroad to the Point of Pines have been discontinued.

The Bee sharply criticises the matron of the new Hospital, closing that citizens who had given liberally for the support of that institution were not courteously treated on a visit to inquire after their employes who had been sent there for treatment. If the facts are as the Bee states them, there is need of a change.

Two rival courses of entertainments are announcing their attractions, that of Messrs. Rock & Bachert and the Edward K. Hood course. Lynn is to be well provided for in the way of amusements. It is recognized as a good "show town."

The parlor shoe store of S. J. Berry & Co. is a very popular place for the ladies. Only ladies' goods are kept, and the attendants are ladies.

The band concerts at Long Beach have been much enjoyed during the summer, and efforts of the proprietors of the Nahant House to make a pleasant resort for their guests have been admirably successful.

It is estimated that the cost of laying water pipes, hydrants, etc., through the streets of Nahant and introducing tubular well water would be $75.000. Should water be taken from Lynn, it would cost $85,000.

Typhoid fever is reported as very prevalent in this city at the present time.

Mr. Jefferson's child, less than 10 years, calls his father "Joe."

This is the last week at Willows Rink for the season. Saturday evening it will close with special attractions.

All persons intending to "remit by mail" have a cents-able excuse for making a delay, until after October 1st.

Articles for the Essex Agricultural Fair at the Willows, Sept. 25th and 26th, have already begun to arrive.

Gov. Butler has decided after all, to follow the Long example, and attend such of the county cattle shows as he can conveniently hit.

There are bargains and bargains, but those of F. W. Lucas & Co., of the New England Boot and Shoe Co. are irresistible.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

The reign of burlesque will be brought to a close at the Bijou theatre in Boston next Saturday night, when the four weeks' engagement of Rice's Surprise Party in Boston will terminate. "Pop," will continue the attraction. Mr. John A. Mackay is nightly recalled again and again, Miss Marie Jansen and Miss Irene Perry have both become great favorites, Miss Stembler's singing is certainly very good, and George Fortesque's antics please Boston audiences as much as ever.

Miss Annie Pixley appears this week at the Park Theatre, in "Zara," for the first time in Boston. The play introduces Zara, a bright, wide-awake girl, known as "the Gypsy," but really, of course, an heiress in disguise, who in due season comes to her own. Besides the requisite number of good and bad folks, Zara, a hoydenish girl, is accepted as a friend by the young lady who poses as the heiress; and there are some very funny society scenes, in which Miss Pixley appears to the best advantage.

Those who visited the Boston theatre last evening, at the first presentation of "Jalma," were astonished at its wonders and its wealth of beauty. The grand ballet, with such beautiful costumes as surely never yet were devised or made, the long processions of warriors in glittering armor, with all the paraphernalia of Eastern splendor; the new and superb stage settings provided by Mr. Getz and his assistants, works of art which could be presented at no other theatre—these will, no doubt, all become "the talk of the town" in a few weeks. With Mr. William Redmund, Mr. Frazer Coulter, Mr. Frank Lamb, Mrs. Thomas Barry and Miss Edith Kingdon in the cast of principal characters (the piece enlists the services of more than 300 salaried people), "Jalma" is certain to be presented dramatically, with full effect.

The play of "Isabel Vane," as presented by Mrs. Henrietta Chanfrau, in Mechanic Hall, last Friday evening, supported by Tayleure's Combination was worthy of a larger audience. Mrs. Chanfrau is really one of the best actresses in the country. The play, although old, is a good one. N. W. Andrews & Co., were the managers.

Next Monday evening, Rice's Surprise Party will appear at Mechanic Hall in "Pop," under the management of Moulton & Johnson. This is a treat for the lovers of the melodrama; it has been played four weeks at the Bijou Theatre to crowded audiences.

The Boston Theatre travelling combination opened their season in the "World" last Monday evening, in Salem. The play has been seen many times there, but a good audience was present—there being few plays and fewer companies, worthy of repeated representations. The explosion scene, and the raft scene were brought out excellently, and the applause of the audience at the striking points was unstinted and enthusiastic; on the occasion of the escape of the hero from the mad house, the demonstrations was electrical. The cast of characters was in the main, good. Miss Rachel Noah as Mary Blythe, was just what might be expected from this excellent artiste, the Mo Jewell of Mr. Craven was finely made up and well personified, and Mr. Harris, although a trifle nervous at first, showed a careful study of his part, and will doubtless improve in its future presentations. Miss Newman as Mabel Huntingford, showed an understanding of what was required in her part, but her voice was not equal to it. The company will play in the principal cities of New England this month and next.

The entertainment in Mechanic Hall last evening, by the Howard Atheneum Company, attracted a large house. As a whole the performance was good and brought strongly to mind the old days of the Howard Company.

Curious accidents, misunderstandings, and embarrassing positions occur in the life of every person. But two ladies of South Bend, Ind., take the banner. Desiring to mail a letter they mistook a fire alarm box for a letter-box. Finding the door unlocked they opened it, and, according to the printed directions, pulled down the hook, and sent in an alarm. Before they had fairly turned around they were surrounded with firemen, engines and hose carts. Of course they didn't know that box was loaded for a fire, and explained how it happened. The color of their faces indicated a terrible conflagration going on in their systems, though they did not request anyone to turn the hose on them. It is surmised that, had there been a chance, the ladies would, under the circumstances, like to have crawled into about five sections of hose.

An exchange says "an Evansville editor eats cloves when he becomes excited." Cloves is it? Some men eat roast coffee beans. It is presumed that cloves will disguise the cause of "excitement" fully as well.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

THE CLINTON Courant claims that the Republican Committee of that town has not power to fill a vacancy. That must certainly be a weak committee.

THE SOUTHBRIDGE Journal gives an illustration of the value of advertising which is to the point. One of the leading merchants of that place sent for a representive of the paper to write up an advertisement, something which is frequently done, and which we are always glad to do for our advertisers when they desire it. By some mistake an article which this firm did not keep was prominently mentioned. During the week that followed the calls for that article were so numerous that they no longer doubt that the people read the advertising columns. It settled it.

THE PROHIBITORY state central committee are assuming a great deal of superior virtue when the say "the people are kept divided by designing politicians and a corrupt press." That the press of this state, in general terms, is corrupt, is not true, and no one knows it better than these prohibitionists.—Very few papers in Massachusetts would accept a bribe. It is true they do not agree with the views of this party with the high "moral tone." If they followed the party with its narrow views, and wholesale commendation of those who did not accept in toto their ideas, they would be but poor leaders of the people, and would deserve reproach.

The Waltham Record "points with pride to the fact that it has fewer medical ads. (and no notices) than any other paper in the country." If we ever succeed in squaring up a lot of old contracts, accepted months ago, we will join the Record in "pointing with pride.—Natick Citizen. We hope so. The Gazette doesn't take any low-priced medical advertisements with top-of-column-next-to-reading-matter proviso. We will advertise for patent medicine men as cheaply as for any one else, but for no less.—Milford Gazette.

How about the advertisement of Ellis' Spavin Cure? If Hubbard pays regular rates for that, it must certainly be a surprise party to somebody. We should be delighted to see such a thing happen to Hubbard.

The Republican caucuses are crowded—in the columns of the Journal. In the halls they are rather thin. * * * * * The attendance at the Republican caucuses is really much smaller than last year.—Boston Globe.

The readers of the above mentioned paper will, of course, believe these statements, and with it the evident attempt on the part of the Globe to keep up the courage of the Butler men by representing that there is utter indifference on the part of the Republicans.—The fact is exactly the opposite. In this town at least three times the usual number attended the first caucus. It was the same in Salem. The Republican party is thoroughly awake, and if they do not defeat Butler this fall it will not be because of indifference to the result of the election.

WHEN THIS issue of the PRESS reaches our readers the work of the Republican convention will have been accomplished, and the standard bearer, whom we hope to elect in November, will have been placed before the people. The Committee of the party for this town has been chosen, and have commenced their work. It is a harmonious and liberal one. Its members have been faithfully identified with the party, and we believe will command its respect and hearty support. They will need to be watchful and alert.—Essex County is the stronghold of Gen Butler, and it will be the aim of the committee, in which they should be handsomely supported, to reduce his majority from last year, if not to carry the town against him. We hope all the opponents of Butler, whether previously identified with the Republican party or not, will join hands with us in the accomplishment of the defeat of the present governor. This is the watchword, and the only watchword of the campaign.

BROTHER POTTER, of the Ipswich Chronicle and Amesbury Villager, is very anxious that Essex County should have a Governor, reminding the rest of the state that only once in the history of the Commonwealth has the county been honored. This leads the Boston Herald to suggest in a very happy vein some of the men of this county whose reputation (?) as war horses of the party would entitle them to this distinction, and it says: "Lynn is overrunning with men who have the gubernatorial bee in their bonnets, or elsewhere concealed about their persons. Hon. John B. Alley, who has a big bar'l, would command an enthusiastic support from a section of his party. He was the gentleman who gave Columbus points on steering his course to the new world but there is no mean prejudice against antiquity this year. Haverhill has so many statesmen that they flow over the edge of the town, and at Ipswich there is Hon. Fred Willcomb, who is known from rocky Greylock to the sand hills of Provincetown. Last, but by no means least, there is Dr. Loring, whose three-cornered grass seeds have won for him the enthusiastic preferences of our farmers. It is not against the doctor that he wrote that highly-wrought and sensational novel, "Barn Yard Talks with My Constituents." There is no longer any universal sentiment against novel reading in the rural regions. Let the doctor be nominated by Essex county."

WE COMMEND to our temperance friends the able letter of Rev. Daniel Dorchester, published in last week's Boston Traveller. It calls upon all friends of temperance to support the nominee of the Republican party, whoever he may be, and not make matters worse by helping the cause of a party of known affiliation with the rum interest. His words are sensible and to the point. He shows that a prohibitory law cannot be enforced against the sentiment of the people, and advises the friends of temperance to take the best they can get, showing them that all the legislation they have obtained in the State has been from the Republican party. If they have not got all they desired, they have made some progress. The same ground is taken by the Lynn Union, whose editor is a strong prohibitionist. Even Faxon admits that there is no possibility of a change in the liquor law this year by the Legislature. Of what avail, then, are the personal views of the nominee of the Republican party? The local option law of the State will still be prohibitory in the towns where public sentiment inclines in that direction. The temperance question is not the issue this year. It is Butlerism. As the campaign progresses this issue will be more and more sharply defined. There can be no middle ground. The supporters of Butler must identify themselves with the Democratic party and its following. Do you want to be counted among that number?

THE STATE Committee of "Independent Republicans," Butler men, recently held a meeting at the Revere House in Boston, and completed their organization. The list of committees shows what sort of men these "Butler republicans" are. Of course we do not know personally the men from the districts outside of this county, but if the committee from Essex County is a sample, there isn't a republican among them. Look at them: James N. Buffum, of Lynn, who has been identified with the greenback party from the outset; E. P. Smith, of Salem, one of the prominent speakers at the greenback rally here last fall; Lewis R. Power, of Marblehead, Litchman's right hand man, and known everywhere as a greenbacker; William S. Knox, of Lawrence, of whom we are not so positive, but who is certainly claimed by that party. We don't find any fault with these gentlemen because they are Butler men, but the idea of calling them Butler republicans! The thing is nonsense. It shows to what straits the Butler people are driven to, and the whole affair is a "put up job" to influence republicans into the belief that no inconsiderable number of the party has joined hands with the General. We beg our friends not to be deceived by these delusions. The republican party is in earnest this year. Those who were lukewarm last year, remaining away from the polls because they did not realize Butler's strength, will rally this fall. It is safe to say that the full vote of the opposition was brought out last year. A full republican vote will change the condition of things, if it does not entirely reverse the decision of the voters last year. Stand by your colors, gentlemen, and let us redeem this town as well as the state.

THE JEFFERSONIAN Club of this county have had a love feast at the Essex House. Our representative from Peabody was present and made a speech, but the gem of the evening, as reported in the papers, was that of Dr. Morse, of Salem. Now Morse is what may be termed a "jiner." If there is a secret organization, of whatever name—no matter how many names—passing by Salem, that does not include him in its ranks, it is a terrible blunder on the part of the organization. Editor Litchman, of Marblehead, is another. These two gentlemen have recently been on a junketing excursion to the Western wilds as official dignitaries of some one or other of these secret orders, and an opportunity for exchange of views and confidences was afforded. The result is Morse's speech. From it we learn that "Charlie" is coming in to the party (the democratic), the presumption also being that he will take all the greenbackers with him. This may do for encouragement to the members of the Jeffersonian Club, but it does not tally with the sentiment we hear expressed by the greenback leaders hereabouts. Here is what Dr. Morse is reported to have said: "He had lately been sitting in secret council in the Senate Chamber of Wisconsin with a man in this (Essex) district, who carried a large number of the voters in the district in his pocket. This man (Litchman of Marblehead) had been opposed by some, but the doctor intimated that he was coming into the party, and ought to be conciliated. The speaker also said there was another man who was not with them this year. He (Boynton) had, he had been told, gone to the other party. If wiser counsel had prevailed and there had not been so much of that bull dog tenacity, this man might have been with them."

THE FINISHING touches are being put on our new town building, and it is expected that by the middle of October it may be dedicated. What the services of dedication will be have not been decided by the committee. We shall have a building suitable for any occasion, with abundant room for all the offices of the town. We shall have a large hall, with which nothing in this vicinity can compare, and on whose stage no dramatic company can feel unwilling to appear.

The hall is not the property of the town until it is accepted from the building committee; it is, therefore, beyond the power of the board of Selectmen to make any arrangements for its future use. This is the ground which they have taken in regard to it, and while they have received numerous applications for the hall, the most they can do is to place them on file, to be acted upon when the proper time shall arrive.

There is one thing they can do, however. They can decide, in a measure, the character of the entertainment which shall be offered to our citizens for the first time after the hall is dedicated. In this the preference of our people should be considered. There are many of them who are interested in the hall, who are among our best citizens, who could not conscientiously attend every show which might be brought here. It ought not to be expected. And yet the first entertainment ought to be such an one as would appeal to the tastes and well-known inclinations of the majority of our citizens. It should be one, as far as possible, from which no one would absent himself on account of its character. If our Board allow such, and only such, to open the hall, they will earn the lasting gratitude of the citizens of the town.

THE MANUFACTURERS' Gazette last week had a sensible and timely article on the Commercial agencies, taking the ground that while their record of mortgages, dissolutions and other events which change the condition of trade is of value, in the principal thing where their reliability should be put to the test they often err, and many times to the injury of the business man.

They claim to give proper and correct ratings for credit, and to deal justly and fairly by all. The reverse is very many times the case. Let a business firm be desirous of a good rating in the book. One of the first things necessary is for that firm to become a subscriber to the agency. That, with a plausible statement, will ensure the desired result. On the other hand his neighbor in business may not be a subscriber; he may decline to give the representative all the minor details of his business; yet his rating will inevitably be lower than the firm first mentioned, though he be worth double the amount, and worthy of more credit.

In the smaller towns, especially, too much reliance is placed upon the statement of the local correspondent. Naturally the man with good credit at home is deserving of the same abroad. And the reputation given him by his friends and neighbors is that by which he may be rightly judged. But this is just what does not get into the agency reports. The correspondents in many towns that we know of are men of no reliability; men who have petty revenges to gratify, and who obtain the appointment of local correspondent that the reputation of men whose "shoes they are not worthy to unloose" may be blasted by them as far as is in their power. With all charity to the agencies it may be assumed that they do not know the reputation of the men whom they in many cases employ.—But they are known in the locality they represent. And when they are refused information, as they often are, because of this knowledge on the part of the business man, the revenge follows.—We append a portion of the remarks of the Manufacturers' Gazette to which allusion has been made: "We know of a case where a firm near Boston is rated as 'moderate, no capital.' Now to our positive knowledge, the firm, though doing business in a modest way, has ample capital for its needs; it has been engaged in business for thirty years or more, and during this time it has always paid 100 cents on the dollar, and it has never given a note or asked for an extension of credit. Still it is classed as 'moderate.' * * * * A man with $3000 invested in his business may be as much entitled to the rank of 'credit first class,' as he with a capital of $100,000. He may be as trustworthy as a millionaire for all that he will buy. Credit and capital do not always go hand in hand."

Public Notice.—Dr. Guilford, the celebrated specialist of Lynn, has by special request of a number of the citizens of Peabody who desired to employ him, made arrangements to be at Baldwin's Hotel, Peabody, every week, commencing next Saturday and every Saturday, there after, until further notice, when he will give free consultations from 9 A. M. to 9 P. M. Dr. Guilford is a regularly educated physician and for the past sixteen years has made a specialty of the treatment of Chronic Complaints, Surgical Diseases, Nervous Disorders and Difficulties Incident to Females. His experience has been so great in his specialties that his skill is far superior to that of the ordinary physician. At his home, Ocean Cottage, Sachem street, Lynn, he has special accommodations for the board of a large number of patients and has special arrangements for the care of confinement cases. Go and see him at once. Remember every Saturday at Baldwin's Hotel from 9 A.M. to 9 P.M.

Mr. J. Frank Boynton, the gentlemanly and popular manager of Wilmot's mammoth clothing store in Salem, was united in marriage last evening to M. Abbie Waters, at the residence of the bride's father. Rev. T. Frank Waters, a brother of the bride, officiating. The happy couple immediately left for Boston and a trip to Albany and New York. They have the best wishes of their many friends, and were kindly remembered by a large number of elegant and costly present.

From this time until October 6th, the Eastern R. R., will run half fare excursions to the different points in the White Mountains. The fare to Fabyan's and return will be $6.00 and other rates in proportion. It is the best time to see the mountains, just as the foliage is beginning to be tinged with the frost. The hotels, we understand, will also offer inducements in the way of reduced rates for accommodation.

The 8th Meet and 1st annual Race Meeting of the L. E. C. W. will be held at Lawrence on Saturday, Sept. 29. T. S. Webb will be Officer of the Day. The races will commence at 2.30 P. M., as follows: One mile, 2 prizes valued at $15 and $5; Two mile, 2 prizes valued at $20 and $10; Five mile, 2 prizes valued at $25 and $10; Obstacle race, 2 prizes.

Junius Brutus Booth, the husband of Agnes Booth, the well known actress at Madison Square Theatre, New York, died Monday evening at the Masconomo House, Manchester-by-the-Sea. He was a brother of Edwin Booth, and was himself well known on the dramatic stage.

All the secret societies have commenced their fall meetings with a full attendance, and the growth and interest is on the increase. The Masons are preparing to celebrate their anniversary, and the A. L. of H. have a little entertainment on their anniversary, Sept. 28, 1883.

Postal cards will not be made any longer after the 10th inst.—Boston Bulletin.

We are satisfied with their present length. All we complain of is the poor quality.—Milford Journal.

In addition to the regular half rate excursions on the Eastern Railroad to the White Mountains, a special one will be given next Tuesday, on which day the rate to Fabyans and return will be only $3.00.

A party was in town, last Saturday, looking for a vacant store for the purpose of starting a ladies' small ware store. A good one with a live man at the head of it would pay.

The musical entertainment and stereoscopic exhibition, which gave views of prominent Irish leaders, etc., at the Institute, was well attended and was a pleasant entertainment.

When the new town hall is let for entertainments a license will probably be charged for exhibitions—something that has never been done in this town. Not a bad idea, however.

An umbrella mender with a smoking stove frightened a horse on Lowell street last Friday, and he ran away, but the owner brought him down after he had run a short distance.

Some persons say the early frosts indicate hot weather further along in the fall. Others say they betoken a long hard winter. You may take your choice without paying any money.

A large St. Bernard dog got stuck in the mud in the brook below Harrington's tannery last Sunday morning, and his barks and whines brought to his relief several passers-by who helped him out.

We extend thanks for an invitation to be present at the exhibition of the Bradford Farmers' and Mechanic Institute at Haverhill, which takes place to-day, and regret that we cannot be present.

The Republicans will welcome to their headquarters on the square all voters who are "ready to unite with them in defense of the good name of the state by supporting their candidate for governor."

Last Friday there was a bastardy case in the police court. Before testimony was taken the young couple held a conference, the result of which was that he promised to do the square thing—get married—and the case was discontinued.

Rev. C. V. Hanson with his wife, formerly of the Baptist church, greeted several of his friends on the Lawrence train last Saturday morning. He was in town yesterday, and we were pleased to receive a call from him in our sanctum.

It is said that a certain unlicensed liquor dealer keeps her liquors in a combination safe. If she would only chalk the combination on the floor our police would like to experiment with it. Perhaps they would become first class cracksmen.

Chief Police Peasley purchased the B. N. Marks place, sold by Chas. Odell at public auction last Thursday, for $3600. Mr. Peasley will occupy the house when vacated by Mr. Marks, who will remove his family to Boston, where his business is.

Every man who expects to vote in November should see to it that he is assessed before the first day of October. If he has not yet received his tax bill, it would be well to make inquiries of the assessors, to see whether his name has not been omitted.

We have received from Rand, Avery & Co., printers, of Boston, one of their new and convenient business calendars for the remainder of this year and 1884. On it are blanks for engagements for each day in the year. They will prove of invaluable aid to business men.

Looks like business. There were ninety-five cars loaded with bark this morning standing in the frieght yard, near Central street, to be delivered to our tanneries. As each car will average eleven cord, that would make 1045 cords of bark standing on the tracks.

Report reaches us that a party is canvassing in this vicinity with various sorts of goods trying to induce farmers to purchase. No money is asked, but a note will be taken. If the farmers haven't the money to pay cash for the article set the fellow adrift. Don't sign any paper.

At a meeting of the school committee last evening, the resignation of Miss Alice Chadwick was accepted and Miss Georgie S. Hart of the first sub-primary promoted to the position. Miss Mary Chandler and Miss Margaret S. Poor were elected to the sub-primaries in the Center school.

The annual parade of the G. A. R. Posts in Essex county took place at Marblehead Wednesday. Every Post was represented, with possibly a single exception, and some of them by very large delegations. About twelve hundred of the war veterans appeared in line, with disabled comrades and invited guests in caariages. Among the guests were Department Commander Evans and Staff, Past Commander-in-chief Merrill, Past Department Commander Adams, Hon. Henry B. Pierce, the Selectmen of Marblehead, and other distinguished officials. There were several fine bands of music and many drum corps in the long procession.—Post 50 were accompanied by about 60 men, headed by the Salem Brass Band. The march commenced at 11 o'clock, and throngs of spectators lined the streets to witness the parade. An incident connected with the march deserves special mention, andt it was gratefully appreciated by the veterans. At the corner of Pleasant and School streets, near the store of L. R. Power, there was a hogshead of delicious lemonade, with numerous drinking utensils, and members of the Cucumber Club acted as waiters, dispensing the cooling beverage to the thirsty Grand Army men. Dinner was served in a mammoth Yale tent. Comrade Thomas Swasey of Post 82 officiated as toast master, and the distinguished invited guests were among the speakers. After the dinner, the consolidated bands gave a concert at the old fort, which was enjoyed by a vast concourse of people. The parade was a grand success.

Tuesday and Wednesday of next week will be held the annual exhibition of the Essex Agricultural Society, at the Willows. Entries of animals, poultry, or agricultural implements, will be received at or before Tuesday at 10 A. M. The cattle pens will be on the grounds of the city farm. Fruits, flowers, vegetables, etc., will be exhibited in the Willow Rink. The ploughing match takes places at 10 A. M. Wednesday, and the trial of draft horses on Fort Avenue, at 2 P. M. Tuesday; at 11.30 on Wednesday the address will be given by Hon. Chas. P. Thompson, of Gloucester, in the lower hall of the Pavilion. At 1 P. M., the dinner will be served in the upper hall by Mr. W. P. Davis of the Pavilion, and the Salem Cadet Band will furnish music at the exercises. Dinner tickets will be one dollar. The railroads, (Eastern and Boston & Maine) will transport passengers to the Fair at half rates, and will return all stock exhibited free. The Willows is a good place for this Fair, and there will be a large attendance from this vicinity, at least.

At a Democratic caucus held last Monday evening, Thomas Carroll acted as chairman, and Thomas H. McGrath, Secretary. The following delegates were elected to the State Convention to be held at Springfield, Sept. 26th: Aaron F. Clark, Wm. H. Brown, John Linnehan, Stephen Mills, Thomas Carroll, Thomas H. McGrath and Frank Winchester. Delegates to the County, Councillor and Senatorial Conventions, S. Augustus Southwick, John F. Pickering, Wm. S. Daniels, William N. Clark, W. J. McCarthy, Richard Lyons, D. J. Conroy. Town Committee, Nathan A. Bushby, Thomas Carroll, Stephen Mills, Thomas J. Relihan, Geo. K. Wiggin, Starr C. Hewitt, Rufus H. Brown, James B. Newhall, James H. Thomas, William T. Mitchell, Asa C. Sawyer, Frank Winchesrer, W. S. O'Brien, John J. Bartlett, Wm. J. McCarthy, Thomas F. Lyons, Thomas H. McGrath, J. N. Ames, S. S. Littlefield.

A man who keeps a licensed place on Mill street, tried to come a little sharp game on a customer the other day, or so the story goes. The customer was an old veteran and being a little short of funds to pay for his regular "grog," let the saloon keeper "chalk it down on the slate" until he drew his pension. The amount of the liquor bill was some two or three dollars and a twenty-dollar check was offered in payment; this the s. k. took and refused to give back any change. But the Vet. was too sharp for him and immediately notified the banks not to cash the check. After the s. k. had made an attempt to cash it at the Warren Bank and been refused, he came to terms and surrendered the check to the owner and received what was due him. "Honesty is the best policy."

The Naumkeag Clothing Company have the largest assortment in Gents' Fall Overcoats and Boys and Children's Clothing at prices within the reach of all. Also bargains in Gent's Fall Underflannels.

Mr. Charles H Verry, employed at J. B. Thomas', was married on the 10th, to Mrs. Lizzie Twiss and the happy couple reside at the house adjoining Wm. T. Lee's apothecary shop, where they entertained their friends last Saturday evening. There were some fourteen from the slaughter house, besides other invited guests. The evening was passed in a social way with singing and music. A bountiful supper was prepared, consisting of escalloped oysters, cakes, fruits etc., followed by an elaborate wine list, that the boys needn't go dry. At a seasonable hour the company disbursed. During the evening the couple were presented with an elegant easy chair.

The Essex County Universalist Sabbath School Union held a convention in Essex on Wednesday afternoon.—There was a large gathering from out-of-town, completely filling the church. The speakers in the afternoon were Rev. J. C. Adams, D. D., of Lynn, Rev. Drs. Bolles and Emerson of Salem, Rev. Messrs. Wright of Newburyport and Wright of Lynn, and Miss Ward of Salem. At the evening session the speakers were Rev. Messrs. Preble of Beverly, Sprague of Peabody, Amos Merrill, Esq., of Peabody, and others. A bountiful collation was provided, which was partaken of by all, in the basement of the North Church.

Quite an exciting runaway was one of the incidents of Monday morning.—A horse and buggy belonging to Mr. Galloupe of Middleton was standing near Moulton's grain store, when he became restless by being bitten by flies and started on a run. He turned the corner of Walnut street, and through that into Wallis, continuing his mad flight into Elm, where he struck an express wagon, nearly overturning the buggy and smashing several spokes from the wheel. The last seen of the horse he had turned the corner into Central street, and was making his way home at a high rate of speed.

The Danvers Mirror says: Rev. W. G. Sperry's address to the Danvers teachers last Wednesday, occupied about a half hour's time, and was very much appreciated by his hearers. His subject was the "Formation of Character," and his argument was that the best teaching will regard more a development of character for honesty and morality, than mere intellectual acuteness. The rapidity with which scholars or classes can be advanced in mere book-learning being now, he thought, largely the standard by which the efficiency of teachers is measured.

To encourage tree planting, the last legislature of this state passed a law by which any inhabitant who shall transplant by the side of the public highway adjoining his premises any forest shade trees, fruit trees, ornamental trees, or any nut-bearing trees, shall be allowed, in abatement of his highway tax, $1 for every four trees set out. Elms must be placed not less than 70 feet apart on the same side of such highway, and no maples or other forest trees, ornamental or fruit trees nearer than 40 feet apart on the same side of such highway.

O. B. Chadwick & Co. have in their office a Newman's watchman regulator clock. It is a very ingenious piece of mechanism, enabling the manufacturer or firm who uses it to know exactly the hour and minute during the night that the premises are examined by the watchman. It is also an accurate time-piece. By its use, or a similar arrangement, our manufacturers of leather can obtain a rebate of $2 on a thousand on their insurance. Mr. Chadwick will be pleased to show its working to any one who will call at his office.

The Republican Town Committee held a meeting last Saturday evening, and organized with the choice of Geo. H. Poor chairman, Geo. M. Foster secretary, and Albert Vittum treasurer.—An executive committee, consisting of Geo. H. Poor, Geo. Randall and G. Fred Osgood, were also elected. The committee have hired the room over Warren Trask's store, and will open public headquarters as soon as possible. This same room was at one time used by the Everett Club for campaign purposes.

A three horse team belonging to J. B. Thomas, and driven by Allan Dunlap, was frightened by the cars on Andover street last Monday morning, and ran away, throwing the driver from the seat, but not seriously injuring him.—The horses dashed down Central street, nearly colliding with several teams, and brought up in a heap at the foot of Central street hill. Assistance was quickly at hand and the horses were released. The wagon was badly damaged.

Letters advertised Sept. 19, 1883: Dennis Bresnan, J. Butler, W. C. Dobson, Maggie Faherty, Joseph Fagen, Kate Graham, Dennis Houlihan, Laura Leach, Thos. Longworth, (2 letters), Michael McGrah, Robert Makehart, Howard Morton, Annie Monaghan, Carrie Morrison, William Murphy, A. F. Place, Jacob Rose, Bridgie Ray, Mrs. Winnie Staniford, Saml. T. Swasey, (4 letters), Edward Sweeney, Mary E. Yoland.

Two well known gentlemen of this town, one a prominent doctor and the other a shoe dealer, through the kindness of another resident, accepted an invitation to ride horseback yesterday afternoon, and when last seen, one was hanging onto a fence near Central street, while the pony was going ahead; the other while riding through Danvers rolled off his pony and rolled and rolled, causing much amusement to the lookers on.

A Peabody lady took the two o'clock train for Salem last Friday, and just before the conductor arrived, she discovered the loss of her pocket book, containing some $20. Her friend lent her a ticket and furnished her one to return home. She was considerably worked up about her loss and spoke to several friends about it. Upon her arrival home she found it in her room where she had left it.

People who are saving up five-cent pieces without the word "cent" on them, in the fond hope that they will be worth dollars some day, may like to know that the government put 5,200,000 of them in circulation. They are selling now in New York for ten cents apiece—a higher price than they will, in all probability, bring again in the next fifty years.

There was a funny mistake in one of the Boston papers last week. They were giving the names of the Republican town committee of Peabody, and after giving two or three names, they had the name of a town in, they called Bowmanville, and then followed the rest of the committee. Bowman Viles is what was sent in. Our friend Viles hardly constitutes a town yet.

Last Thursday afternoon all the teachers of the Wallis, Bowditch and Center schools listened to a lecture on drawing in the schools by Prof. Carter of Boston, this being one of a series delivered by him, to better fit them for their work in teaching this accomplishment in the schools. A printed list of directions, to secure uniformity in teaching, will be distributed by the committee.

It is said that one of our young men at the beach last Sunday walked up to the door of the bathing-house in which he thought his male companion was dressing, and knocking on the same, testily inquired: "When in blazes are you going to get those pants on?" There was a faint giggle and a silvery voice replied, "When I get married, I suppose."

The young friends of Miss Blanche Tobey were highly entertained at her home on Jacobs street last Thursday evening. During the evening her friends presented her with a gold ring. The company indulged to their hearts' content in various parlor amusements until weary of the evening's pleasures they hied themselves homeward and to bed.

There will be a meeting of the Essex Club on Saturday next, September 22d, at Young's Hotel, Boston. Dinner at 1.30 P. M. This gathering, immediately after the State Convention, will be of unusual interest, and it is expected that distinguished representatives of the Republican party will be present.

The people of West Peabody have heard nothing of the candidature of Rev. W. G. Spaulding for representative to General Court as an independent candidate. It will be hard to find a candidate willing to sacrifice himself upon the altar of his country if Mr. Spaulding does not accept the doubtful honor.

The monthly dinner of the Jeffersonian Club of Essex county at Salem, called together about seventy-five Democrats who partook of a good dinner and listened to the cheering speeches of the leaders of the party. Among the speakers was Representative Aaron F. Clark and Rufus H. Brown, Esq.

The Newburyport city government has voted to publish the tax list, so that the citizens may see how the assessors have done their work. The valuation of all the real and personal property is to be given and the amount of tax and property exempted, with the reasons for exemption. A good idea.

E. A. Harris, a conductor on the Old Colony railroad, proposes to originate a mission car for mission work amongst railroad men. Centainly, that's right; and when he reaches Peabody with his car let him include the hack drivers about the depot. It's a very broad field for mission work.

Now is the season of the year when the average candidate for office, who, prior to his nomination, passed you gently by, his proboscis pointing in the direction of the setting sun, greets you with a winsome smile and grasps you by the hand in a manner that betokens much friendship.

A solemn procession passed along the street the other day. Truant officer Reed was taking a truant boy to the lockup while a long procession of his chums followed in mournful silence, broken occasionally by one of the urchins crying out, "Trip him up, Charlie, trip him up."

DROWNED IN BEER.

CONCERNING THIS POPULAR BEVERAGE TWO MEN EXPRESS THEIR MINDS.

"The fact is sir, and you may stick a pin there, that the people of this country are likely to be drowned in a flood of lager beer," shouted an enthusiastic tectotaler the other day into the ear of your cornered correspondent. That German drink has struck us hard. It is the second deluge."

"Yes, and the worst of this beer-drinking business is that it gets up kidney troubles, as a heavy wind raises the waves," added a city physician, who had a knowledge of the times and a tendency to metaphor. "The midnight 'schooner' leaves behind it a wake of furred tongues, headaches, torpid livers, nausea, and all that, and lays the foundation of Bright's Disease."

This melancholy fact accounts in part for the increasing sales of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER, which at once mitigates these symptoms. Price 25 cents. Ask your physician about it. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Book Notices.

The October ATLANTIC is specially notable as containing an essay from the unpublished manuscript of Ralph Waldo Emerson, and though it was evidently written a number of years ago, it is thoroughly characteristic and exceedingly interesting. Henry James continues his studies of provincial towns in France, this time going from Poitiers to Carcassonne. Two chapters of "A Roman Singer" and of "Newport" continue and increase the interest of these two excellent serial stories. A very timely article is one on "Volcano Studies" by Horace D. Warner. "Cream-White and Crow-Black," by E. M. De Jarnette, is an engaging chapter of reminiscences of "good old mammies" in the South. Henry W. Holland furnishes an interesting chapter on "Heredity," apropos of Mr. Galton's latest work. Edward Irenœus Stevenson contributes a philosophical tragedy entitled "Amiability." There are several poems, careful reviews of some of the most important new books, and three brief, bright essays in the Contributors' Club. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The October number of HARPER'S Monthly is one of the earliest on our table and is an unusually attractive number. The frontispiece is a masterly engraving by Kruell, from Gilbert Stuart's portrait of Washington. This portrait illustrates the opening article of the Number—"Last Days of Washington's Army at Newburgh," by J. T. Headley. There is also Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop's novelette, "Prisoners," which is concluded, an article on Horse Farming in Kentucky, Colonel Higginson's American History series, "Saunterings in Utah," by Phil Robinson, besides editorials. The publishers announce the conclusion of "A Castle in Spain" in the November Number, and the beginning, shortly afterward, of a new novel of startling literary interest, by William Black, entitled "Judith Shakspeare," illustrated by Abbey.

DEMOREST'S Illustrated Monthly Magazine continues to merit the high encomiums passed upon its literary and artistic merit. The October number equals in interest its predecessors, and contains many well-written and entertaining articles. Among the contents are "From Oxford to Cambridge," an interesting illustrated article; "A Chapter on Sitting-Rooms;" "How we Live in New York—The Working Girl," by Jennie June; and "Current Notes," which treat of the World's Progress. The October number has for a frontispiece a fine steel engraving, "The Foster Mother's Alarm." A litho-photo of Mrs. Phinney's statue of the Lorelei, now owned by Mr. W. Jennings Demorest, also adorns this number.

The SEASON for this month is remarkable for its timely patterns. The models are after the best of styles in London and Paris, and no first class dressmaker can afford to be without this magazine. There are in addition illustrations in needle work and embroidery. Examine it at the store of the Peabody News Co., and you will be convinced of its worth.

Said the teacher to the scholar, "What is the largest city in the world?" And the child replied, "Chicago." "No," said the teacher; "Chicago is not the largest city in the world." "Well," said the child, "anyway, a Chicago man told me it was."

HAY FEVER.—For twenty years I was a sufferer from Catarrh of the head and throat in a very aggravated form, and during the summer months with Hay Fever. I procured a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm and after a few applications received decided benefit—was cured before the bottle was used. Have had no return of the complaint. Charlotte Parker, Waverly, N. Y.

One and one-half bottles of Ely's Cream Balm entirely cured me of Hay Fever of ten years' standing. Have had no trace of it for two years. Albert A. Perry, Smithboro, N. H.

Since boyhood I have been troubled with Catarrh and Hay Fever, and have been unable to obtain permanent relief until I used Ely's Cream Balm. It has cured me. E. L. Clickener, New Brunswick, N. J. Price 50 cents.

In a Newport boudoir: "Oh! he is such a charming gentleman and he did not make his money in vulgar trade, either. No indeed. He owns a bank for I have heard people who know him speak of it. It is in a Western city named Faro."—Philadelphia News.

MARYLAND TO THE FRONT.—The Hon. Oden Bowie, Ex-Governor of Maryland, President of the Baltimore City Passenger Railway Co., also President of the Maryland Jockey Club says: "Both in my family, and in my private stables, as well as those of the City Passenger Railway Co. I have for several years used St. Jacobs Oil most satisfactorily." Such a statement ought to convince every reader of this paper.

An Arkansas preacher, so goes the report recently, paused in his sermon, reached a revolver from his desk, shot through the window and killed a squirrel that was sporting on the fence near by, sent a boy out to secure the game, and calmly proceeded with his discourse.

FRESH FROM THE PULPIT.

SAINTS AND SINNERS STIRRED BY A CLERGYMAN'S CONFESSION—THE FACTS IN FULL.

Eloquent writing, merely, convinces nobody. General statements and assertions are cheap. Plain words are best, and come most easily from the mouth of a witness who is conscious that he speaks truth. Let the reader judge if the following have the ring of genuine coin:

"I have long been afflicted with rheumatism, a badly disordered liver and by general debility. All my strength seemed gone. I tried a number of other medicines without obtaining relief, but I do hereby testify to the great merits of PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, since after the use of two bottles I find myself feeling well and strong again—in fact like a new man. I cheerfully recommend it as an excellent strengthening and invigorating Tonic."

Names and dates are of supreme importance. Testimonies are readily manufactured, but the foregoing is from a letter dated St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 30, 1882, and signed by Rev. Edward Wills, founder of and ex-pastor of the University Street Baptist Church Residence, No. 313 Spruce, that city. From the very fact of their responsible and prominent position, ministers of the Gospel are cautious about giving their signatures or influence to any proprietary medicine or advertised article. Hence the value of unsolicited testimonials like the foregoing.

Please note: First.—PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not an essense of Ginger. Don't indulge that idea nor permit others to impress it upon you. It combines the choicest Jamaica Ginger with other ingredients—constituting the best Tonic known in medicine; Second.—It is pleasant to take and immediate in its action. Prices, 50c. and $1—the latter the more economical. Get it of your druggist, or send for circular to HISCOX & Co., New York.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—It is a lovely day, the air fragrant with the aroma of early autumn, the sky brilliant with a wondrous panorama of shifting clouds. Suppose you accompany me to the old North Bridge in Salem, made famous by Col. Leslie's retreat, and take a trip down the harbor in the jaunty little steamer "Charlotte," owned by N. C. Locke, who kindly invites us to make ourselves comfortable. We touch at the Willows, seeing groups of pleasure-seekers scattered among the rocks. Leaving the Willows, we speed swiftly towards Lowell and Baker's islands. But heeding the Captain's admonition, to make ourselves comfortable, we did not care to go very near to Misery. The scenery on the Beverly side is picturesque and delightful. The sea is continually changing, now a deep, dark blue, and anon sparkling and smiling with silver-crested waves. We find ourselves growing quite poetical and Byronic and quoting with fervor,

"Roll on thou deep and dark blue ocean, roll."

On our way homeward we will take a trip up Danvers river. A restful, quiet scene after the turbulent waters we have passed through.

"We paused amid the pines that stood
The giants of the waste
Tortured by storms to shapes as rude,
As serpents interlaced."

We are in sight of a place known to old inhabitants as "Horse-pasture point," which we find occupied; we are signaled from the shore and invited by Mr. Lewis Foan to land and inspect the camp, he kindly rowing us in his dory. A nice camp named "Comfort" stands among the sheltering pines. Mr. Foan hospitably shows us around the camp, which after a careful survey, we think very appropriately named. We notice samples of the cooking which surely does credit to the cook. Eight of the ex-volunteers came down here the first of July. On the 4th, their guests numbered seventeen. If their greeting was as cordial as ours they were agreeably entertained. We are invited to take supper with them, but our time being limited we accept an invitation to dine with them at a future date. Although perfect strangers, we are made to feel very much at home. After a short stay we bid them good bye and reach home in the gloaming. DANIEL DAY.

Until Master Workman Butler gives the word, the brotherhood of whom he is the head cannot know who is to be their candidate in the state election.—It is taken to be a matter of course that it will be either himself or his man Thompson, but which no one but Butler can tell, and he won't tell till he gets ready and makes up his mind which course will serve Butler most.—The situation is interesting as showing how completely Butler has become the owner and dictator of what was once called the democratic party of Massachusetts.

A woman was arrested in Kansas City for appearing on the street in a Mother Hubbard dress, which the chief of police decided was too short. As we understand it a Mother Hubbard dress is one of these things that gather at the neck and go where they darn please.—It will be remembered that this Mrs. Hubbard is the one who went to the cupboard to get her poor dog a bone, but failed to find any bone there. If the madame would go to one of these dresses that are named after her, she could find bones enough for her dog.

A well-known deacon goes a-fishing in Lake Quannapowitt once or twice every week, and comes home generally with a very small string, but often remarks, "well, you need not laugh, for I hooked a fish to-day so long [illegible], but he got away." His wife now greets him with the trying interrogatory, "Where's that large one to-day?"

"In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Do not try with stupid prattle,
To deceive your jealous wife."

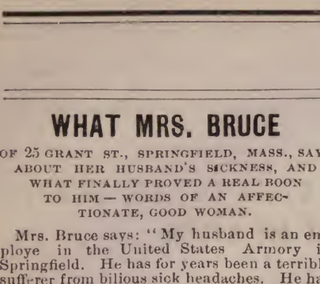
WHAT MRS. BRUCE



OF 25 GRANT ST., SPRINGFIELD, MASS., SAYS ABOUT HER HUSBAND'S SICKNESS, AND WHAT FINALLY PROVED A REAL BOON TO HIM — WORDS OF AN AFFECTIONATE, GOOD WOMAN.

Mrs. Bruce says: "My husband is an employe in the United States Armory in Springfield. He has for years been a terrible sufferer from bilious sick headaches. He has fearful attacks of this kind. Sometimes they will come on him every week or so. He has never found any medicine which would give him any permanent relief or prove any preventive against these severe attacks until he tried Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. He has received the greatest benefit from its use." The testimony of Mrs. Bruce is like that of hundreds of others, who say: "I procured a bottle of Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, and used it with the best of results. I have no more headache or pain in the side. Indeed, the medicine seems to have an almost magical effect, and I feel very grateful for FAVORITE REMEDY. Dr. Kennedy is glad to recommend his medicine to all who are suffering from sick headaches resulting from any of the above causes, for it is a sure, positive cure.

TO KEEP THE BLOOD PURE

is the principal end of inventions and discoveries in medicine. To this object probably no one has contributed more signally than Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y. in the production of a medicine which has become famous under the title of the FAVORITE REMEDY. It removes all impurities of the Blood, regulates the disordered Liver and Kidneys, cures Constipation, Dyspepsia and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. Sold by your druggist, $1.00 a bottle.

The Fair at Manchester.

MESSRS. EDITORS OF THE PRESS,—On Thursday and Friday, Sept. 6 and 7, we visited the New England Fair at Manchester, N. H., which closed on the latter evening after a run of four days. The weather had been all that could be wished, and nothing occurred to mar the pleasures of the visitors except the immense quantity of fine black dust or ashes, the result of cleaning the land which three months ago was covered with a forest of scrub oak and pine. The grounds, comprising about fifty acres, are located some two miles outside the city, and are easily reached by rail or barges, and now contains a well laid out half mile track, a good ball ground, and the following buildings, owned in part by the New England Agricultural Society and the Manchester Driving Park Association, have been built: A main exhibition building, three stables, a grand stand, sheds for the stock, a large building for the bench show of dogs, a treasurer's building, and a judges' and "press" stand at the track.

When it is considered that in order to do all this it was necessary to cut the wood and burn the land over, it is not to be wondered at that there was plenty of dust, nor that one looked like a coal heaver after walking around a couple of hours, but every one seemed to take it good-naturedly, and many were the jokes one heard passed between friends. The management of the grounds was excellent, and all was done in the way of sprinkling possible, but with so many walking around water had very little effect.

The great attraction was the reception of Gov. Butler and staff, with distinguished guests, by Gov. Hall and staff. The gubernatorial party from Boston arrived on a special train shortly after 10 o'clock. It included Gov. Benjamin F. Butler, Gov. Jarvis of North Carolina, Secretary of the Navy William E. Chandler, J. Frederick Elmore, minister from Peru, and H.A.P. Carter, minister from the Sandwich Islands; Mayor Palmer of Boston, Jobbe Duval, vice-president of the municipal council of Paris, France; M. Amoreau, M. Caubert and M. Grosjean of Paris, accompanied by M. Cyr, editor of Le Republicain of Boston, as interpreter; Commodore Badger of the Charlestown navy yard, Pay Director Gilman, Chief Engineer Robie, Commander Gridley, and Lieutenants Badger, Morony and Everett, of Secretary Chandler's staff; Adjutant-General Dalton, General Cilley and Colonel Drinkwater of Governor Butler's staff; Lieut.-Governor Ames of Massachusetts, Messrs. Tower, Hall, Smith, Maguire, Cushing and Haskell of Governor Butler's council; Colonel Strahn and Adjutant Maguire of the Massachusetts Ninth Regiment, Captain Kemp and Lieutenants Andrews and Ellard of the Boston Lancers, Colonel Paul B. Means of North Carolina, John M. Little, chairman of the board of Managers of the New England Manufacturers' and Mechanics' Institute, Benjamin S. Purdee of the New Haven Palladium, and others. Gov. Samuel W. Hale and Adj.-Gen. A. D. Ayling, Inspector-General Elbert Wheeler, Gen. S. S. Wilkinson, Gen. O. G. Johnson, Gen. H. Colley, Cols. Whitman, Smith and Clark of his staff, arrived from Concord some time earlier, and were present on the arrival of the party from Boston.

Among the distinguished New Hampshire gentlemen who accompanied the party to the grounds were Senator-elect Austin F. Pike, ex-Gov. Jas. A. Weston, ex-Gov. Person C. Cheney, Hon. Moody Currier, Hon. Edward Gustine, Hon. James E. Lothrop, mayor of Dover, and members of the local city government. It was estimated that during the visit of the Governors seventeen thousand persons were on the ground, the Manchester & Lawrence R. R. alone carrying seven thousand without an accident.

In the stock department the show of cattle was exceptionally fine and large, several herds being entered, both grade and cross breeds. Under the latter, as one of the judges, we notice the name of Charles King, of Peabody, presumably Mr. James P., as we know of no such man as the above. In the fancy stocks the Jerseys, Holsteins, Ayrshire, Devons, Guernseys, Herefords and Short Horns were fully represented. In the latter class (Short Horns), Mrs. Eliza Sutton, on stock from her Centre Harbor farm, received three first prizes, one second and the sweepstakes. She also had a fine exhibition of Cotswold sheep, and received first premium as follows: Ram and ten of his get, ram two years old and older, ram one year old and under two, ewes two years old or older, ewes one year old and under two; also, second premium on ram and ten of his get.

It is reported that Gov. Butler purchased a buck and three ewes of this flock, and ordered them sent as a present to Gov. Jarvis of No. Carolina, who was present as a guest in his party.

The other classes of sheep were well represented by the Southdowns, Oxforddowns and Shropshires, classes which are raised more for their mutton than wool producing qualities. We did not see a single pair of Merinos or fine wooled animals on the grounds, an omission on the part of breeders which the Manchester Union comments on as follows: "Strange to say there was not a fine wooled sheep on the ground. Where are the members of the Sheep Breeders' Association? A state that sells bucks at thousands of dollars ought to be awake on New England fair days. So, too, ought our Connecticut river sheep men. But they say not a word on fine wools this year. Some were entered by Mr. Holden of Vermont, but were not present."

In the departments of agricultural and domestic implements and farm products usual entries were made, and anything from a sewing machine needle to a patent churn or a stump puller could be seen. Of farm products the least said the better. The display was not large, and what there was was shown in a tent, as the Society did not have time to erect a building for the purpose, in consequence of which the fruit and vegetables were covered with fine black ashes, and before you could tell whether a dish contained apples or potatoes you had to brush them off. Another season will avoid this, as it is the intention of the Society to seed the land down. The bench show was very fine, the entries being sufficient to fill every space. The largest entries were made by Dr. Jarvis, of Manchester, N. H., Red Irish Setters, and by Dr. G. B. Sawtelle, of Malden, who entered eight St. Bernard dogs, some of which were imported, the largest weighing about two hundred pounds. His dog Roland, we think, is the handsomest we ever saw, and his kennel was always surrounded by an admiring crowd. The Fox Terrier, Pug and Setter classes were well represented, as were also the Beagle, Bull dogs and Colliers. To show the sagacity of this latter class a half dozen sheep were turned loose on the grounds among the crowd and three dogs sent out to herd them, which they successfully did in a very short time, driving them back into their pen entirely unaided by any person.

The entries of horses was not particularly noticeable with the possible exception of some half dozen stallions kept for stock purposes, the most noted of which was "Ned Wallace," owned by Mr. A. C. Wallace of Manchester, and "Frank Falconer," owned by the Messr. Chesley of Lee.

At Smyth's hall, on Elm street, in the city, the articles classed under the head of Manufactured goods, Needle work, Industrial Art and Embroidery, were on exhibition, and we do not think it was hardly in keeping with the general magnitude of the rest of the fair. Indeed, we think we have seen at our Essex Co. fairs a far better display, both as regards quantity and quality, than was shown here.

To enumerate all the things seen during our two days' stay would occupy more of your space than you might care to give. Suffice it to say that during Friday we visited the Track, where, through your kindness, we were admitted to the "press stand," and given an extra opportunity to witness the races, which were the principal feature of that day and have been reported more or less fully in the Boston papers. The only horse entered from this vicinity was W. H. Preston's "Charley Knox" of Lynn, who succeeded in getting first money in the 2.38 class.

We cannot close this letter without referring to two of the principal features of this Fair, viz.: the gambling and liquor selling on the grounds. As one gentleman truly said, "this fair was gotten up to make money," and make money they did by letting privilege to parties ostensibly as victualling houses, but in reality as liquor saloons. On one avenue there were thirteen places where drink could be bought, while in front of the buildings so used, or in the immediate vicinity, six games were in progress, in addition to the pool selling, wholly unnoticed by the police.

In conclusion let me say that while this Fair has been a success financially, both to the managers and the railroads interested, it is not difficult to find Manchester people who are ready to say that it has been positive detriment in more ways than one to the city.

FIRE DEPARTMENT NOTES.

The old Torrent hand engine has gone to Turners Falls, Mass., to supply the place of a steamer that is in the repair shop. Four men from Hunneman's works in Boston were down and overhauled the machine, before it was shipped, and found it in first class condition. The price paid was in the vicinity of three hundred and fifty dollars, which was "dirt cheap" for an engine with the Torrent's record.

A slight fire was extinguished by the night watch in the old Stevens' tannery on Central street Friday night.

The horses of the H. and L. truck have got into the habit of running back just before starting out at an alarm, and to prevent accidents, the Engineers have placed a couple of chocks or trigs behind the truck.

The Board of Engineers have been inspecting the hydrants the past week, putting them in thorough order.

Engineers Folsom and Pierce, Foreman Cummings and a number of other firemen from this department, visited Reading last Thursday, to witness the trial of the new Button steamer. The engine is third class, with all the latest improvements, and is a beauty in every respect. The running works are painted a dark green, striped with gold, and the frame lake with gold trimmings. The boiler is nickle with brass bands, and brass dome. The engine weighs about 5400 all ready for a fire. Among the improvements is the absence of the balance wheels, and the introduction of the Button boiler feed, and an arrangement whereby the pipeman can shut off steam from the engine by shutting off the stream of water at the nozzle. The hose carriage built to run with the steamer, sets lower than the horse hose carriage in our department, carries 1000 feet of hose and weighs just 1800 pounds empty, or just ten pounds lighter than Hose 1. It is painted to match the steamer and has all the necessary fixtures of a hose carriage. The trial took place at the head of the lake in Wakefield and was a very good test considering the weather. The following is the official record of the test:

Fire lighted at eight minutes past two, with cold water in the boiler.

First steam 5 lbs. in 4 1-2 minutes.
10 " " 5 1-2 "
20 " " 6 3-4 "
Engine started in 7 1-2 "

and in 10 1-4 minutes the guages showed 100 lbs of steam and 160 lbs water pressure.

The first line laid was 1000 feet and on the first test a stream was thrown from an 1 1 8 inch nozzle to a distance of 190 ft. 5 in. Second test with same line of hose and an inch nozzle 197 ft. 6 in. . Third test same line and nozzle, 204 ft. 1 in. Another line of 1000 feet was then laid and a stream was thrown 163 ft. 9 in. when the hose burst. A short line of 150 feet was then laid and the stream turned into the lake so that no record was made. Had there been hosemen to handle the pipe that understood a steamer stream, we think that it would have made a big difference, but the elevation was generally too low, and the pipemen were breaking up the stream by placing their thumbs over the nozzle and spraying it. After the trial was over a procession was formed with the—

After a short parade of about two miles a supper was served in the Lyceum hall, at which about two hundred hungry men were made happy. Music and speeches followed supper. The Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Chief of the Bureau of Labor, acted as Toast Master. Among the speakers of the evening were the chairman of the old Board of Selectmen and the chairman of the present Board, Mr. Holroyd, of Waterford, N. Y., the head of the Button Engine works, Mr. Theo. Button, Judge Bancroft, Asst. Foreman Moreland of steamer 2, of Peabody, who responded for the Peabody department, Chiefs of Stoneham, Wakefield, Everett, Driver Cartwright of the Cambridge department and Chief Parker of Reading. The boys got home about 8.30 in the evening well pleased with their entertainment. The best speech of the evening was by Clerk Hills of the Abel Proctor H. and L. when he called for "more beans for Reith."

Reading has got one thing that would be a great benefit to Peabody, and that is a good eating house, where a person can get a square meal and enjoy eating it.

Foreman Eugene Kelley of H. & L. No. 1 of Danvers, was arrested in Wiley & Poor's currying shop on Foster street, Tuesday noon by Chief Peasley. He was arrested on the charge of setting fire to the house of Hose 4. It seems that Kelley wanted to get a new house for that company, and thought that by burning the old one they would get what they wished. Kelley had tried twice to fire the building, by placing the kerosene lamp against the side of the walls, and hanging the broom over the lamp, but the second time he was watched, and had the case brought home to him.

LATER.—Foreman Kelley was acquitted at his trial in Danvers to-day, as there was no evidence to hold him.

Six members of the Long Reach S. F. E. Co. of Bath, Me., were in town Friday and visited the engine house and were very much pleased with the house and apparatus. ZERO.

Mr. David Shaw is improving the looks of his house on Lynn street, by painting.

Mr. Frank Newhall, the iceman, is the happy father of an eight pound boy. (Good enough, Frank.)

The base ball game between the So. Peabody nine and the nine from Henry Law's shoe shop in Lynnfield, resulted in a defeat for the So. Peabody nine.

Mr. Orlando F. Newhall met with a painful accident one day last week. When returning from his field where he had been at work, he jumped a low fence and striking on a stone injured his foot and ankle, since which he has been obliged to use a crutch.

Mrs. Mary Mullan, an old woman, died quite suddenly last Sunday night. Her lifeless remains were found in her room on the floor, and beside her, her pipe, which showed she had sat down in apparently her usual health. Medical Examiner Osborne viewed the remains and pronounced it a case of apoplexy.

WHAT OUR BOY SAYS.

That the papers are telling how "Gould got rich."

That that don't bother him as much as how he is going to pay his wash bill.

That the hand shaking time has come—the saddest of the year.

When politicians all do try and make their election clear.

That his girl has gone back on him because he wouldn't go to church.

That he told her that "them pews were too uncomfortable."

That she heard he sat on a picket fence for three hours and a half to see a base ball match, and that settled it.

That the trade dollar after all is not so bad off as Noah's dove on its first trip.

That it can always find a resting-place in a church collection plate.

That one of our firemen stole an interview with his girl at an upper story window.

That he must have belonged to the hook and ladder truck.

That in a certain barber shop in town they cast reflections on passers-by.

That it is done with a piece of looking-glass.

That an advertisement reads "tin roofing and spouting" of all kinds.

That that man must be a political orator.

That the streets are very dusty on Sunday.

That they should be sprinkled on Sunday as well as other days.

That politics makes strange bed fellows.

That it also makes friendly those bad fellows.

That he hopes the Fair days next week wont prove foul ones.

That a subscriber to the PRESS is alleged to have objected to our item on the editor of the Post.

That if that subscriber wants us too we will show him how the Republican Party is benefited, by our putting that editor in his true character.

Commenting upon a remark disparaging the work of the newspaper reporter an exchange says: "As for accuracy and truthfulness, there is no calling in the world which is subjected to so severe a test as that of a reporter. The doctor's mistakes are hidden under ground, the lawyer's are only known to the judge, the minister's congregation cannot answer him back, the merchant's mistakes are rectified privately, but thousands of critical readers stand ready to test the reporter's work, and, if he makes a mistake, the paper is called to account for it publicly."

WHAT THE PEOPLE SAY

SARSAPARILLIAN HYGIENIC WINE.

What D. N. GRIFFIN, dealer in Clothing, Hats, Caps and Gents' Furnishing Goods says about it:

Having used RAYMOND'S HYGIENIC WINE in my family, I take pleasure in recommending it to the public as being a safe, delicious and highly beneficial tonic, in short, all that it is claimed to be.

D. N. GRIFFIN, Beverly.

I have been acquainted with B. F. RAYMOND for five years and have always found him a man of unimpeachable character, and business integrity. What can be said of him can be said of his medicine, there is no humbug about it. DANIEL W. BARTLETT,
Chairman Selectmen, Essex.

WALTER FLINT, 29 Federal St, Beverly, Mass, says: "I had measles very badly this last winter. Was lett with a bad cough and very weak. After staying at home for several weeks, after getting out of doors, I commenced to go to school. Cough was so bad and strength so poor that Physician ordered me to leave school. I took a great deal of medicine, but nothing seemed to help me. Cough seemed to grow worse instead of better. Some one recommended Sarsaparillian Hygienic Wine. I tried it, and before I had taken one half a bottle, I was back to school, and cough was better. After taking whole bottle, cough was entirely cured, and felt strong and hearty."

Duty.

BY ARNIE.

We grasp at the future eagerly
Forgetting it never comes;
For when we are in the present,
The wheel forever runs.

Future and past are golden—
Then why are ye idle now?
Is the past an empty story,
While to the future you vainly bow?

Go and work in the harvest;
See that the grain is stored!
Gather the sheaves and bind them,
Prepare your winter's horde!

For the bleak winds come unheeding
The past with its golden store,
And the future is vain endeavor—
Then live in the present more!

The Cause of Her Grief.

Her bosom was heaving
With wildest emotion;
His gaze was bent on her
With wildest devotion.

He saw she was weeping—
This true-hearted lover—
The cause of her sorrow
He sought to discover.

O, tell me, he whispered,
The cause of your weeping,
And why from your lover
The reason you're keeping?

Hast lost any trinket—
An earring or locket;
Your chewing gum dropped through
A hole in your pocket?

O, worse than that, Harry,
The fair maiden blubbered!
My papa won't buy me
A new Mother Hubbard.

Selected Story.

The First Cloud.

'It was to meet such difficulties as this that tontines ——' 'Bother!'

I wrote the first sitting at my desk, and said the last aloud, impatiently—well, there, angrily—for Emma had bounced into the room, run to the back of my chair, and clapped her hands over my eyes, exclaiming:

'O, Dick, what a shame! And you promised to come up and dress!'

'I do wish you would not be so childish!' I cried, snatching away her hands. 'There's a blot you've made on my manuscript.'

'Don't be so cross, sir!' she said, laughing, as she gave a waltz round the room, making her pretty silk dress whisk over one of the light chairs, which she merrily picked up, and then, coming to my writing-table, she took a rose out of a basket of flowers, and began to arrange it in her hair.

'I'm not cross,' I said coldly, 'but engaged in a serious work of a mercantile and monetary nature. You seem to think men ought always to be butterflies.'

'No, I don't, Dick dear,' she cried. 'There, will that do?'

She held her head on one side for me to see the creamy rose nestling in her crisp, dark hair; but, after a glance at it, I let my eyes fall upon my desk, and went on writing my pamphlet. I saw that she was looking wistfully at me, but I paid no heed, and then she came and rested her hands upon my shoulder.

'Are you cross with me, Dick?' she said softly.

'Cross? no!' I jerked out impatiently. 'Only I thought I had married a woman, and she has turned out to be a child.'

There was silence then for a few moments, only broken by the scratching of my pen. The little hands twitched a little as they lay upon my shoulder, and I very nearly wrote down, instead of 'The calculations arrived at by the projectors of tontines'—'Richard Marlow, how can you be such a disagreeable wretch?' But of course I did not write it—only thought—and then I felt wonderfully disposed to turn round and snatch the little, graceful figure to my breast, and kiss away the tears which I knew were gathering in her eyes.

Somehow or other though, I did not do it—only went on glumly writing—for I was cross, worried and annoyed. I had set myself a task that necessitated constant application, and I was not getting on as I could wish; so, like many more weak-minded individuals of the male sex, instead of asking for the comfort and advice of my wife, I visited my disappointment upon the first weak object at hand, and that object was the lady in question.

'Please, Dick dear, don't be angry with me. I can't help feeling very young and girlish, though I am your wife. I do try, oh! so hard, to be womanly, but Dick, I'm only eighteen and a half.'

'Thirteen and a half, I should say,' I said, scornfully, just as if some sour spirit were urging me on to say biting, sarcastic things; but, for the life of me, I could not help it.

There was no answer—only a little sigh—and the hands were withdrawn.

I went on writing—rubbish that I knew I should have to cancel.

'Had you not better get ready, Dick?' said Emma softly. 'You said you would come when I went upstairs, and the Wilsons won't like it if we are late.'

'Hang the Wilsons!' I growled.

There was another pause, filled up by the scratch, scratch of one of the noisiest pens I ever used, and another little sigh.

Emma was standing close behind me, but I did not look round, and at last she glided gently to a chair and sat down.

'What are you going to do?' I said roughly.

'Only to wait for you, Dick, dear,' she replied.

'You need not wait. Go on. I shan't come. Say I've a headache—say anything.'

'Dick, are you unwell?' she said tenderly, as she came behind me once more, and rested her little hands on my shoulder.

'Yes—no. Pray don't bother. Go on. Perhaps I'll come and fetch you.'

There was another pause.

'Dick, dear, I'd rather not go without you,' she said meekly, at last.

'And I'd rather you would go without me!' I said angrily. 'The Wilsons are our best friends, and I won't have them slighted.'

'Then why not come, Dick, dear?' said the little woman, and I could see that she was struggling bravely to keep down her tears.

'Because I've no time for such frivolity. There, you've wasted enough of my time already, so go.'

Scratch, scratch, scratch, went that exasperating pen, as I went on writing more stuff to cancel, and yet too weak and angry to leave off like a sensible man, run up and change my things, and accompany my little wife to the pleasant and social gathering a few doors lower down our road.

She had been looking forward to the visit as a treat. So had I until that gloomy fit came over me; but as I had taken the steps already made, I felt that I could not retreat without looking foolish, so I acted with that usual wisdom displayed by man under such circumstances, and made matters worse.

'Did you hear me say that I wished you to go alone?' I said angrily.

'Yes, yes, Dick dear, I'll go if you wish,' Emma said very meekly; 'but indeed I'd far rather stay at home.'

'You are desired to go; you have a rose in your hair,' I said, satirically—oh, that poor satire, when it was put there to please me!—'and they expect you; so now go—and enjoy yourself,' I added, by way of a sting to my insensible speech.

'I can't enjoy myself, Dick,' she said gently, 'unless you come too. Let me stay.'

'I desire you to go!' I exclaimed, banging my hand down on the desk.

She looked at me with the great tears standing in her piteous eyes, and then, coming nearer, she bent over me and kissed my forehead.

'Will you come and fetch me, Dick?' she said softly.

'Yes—no—perhaps—I don't know.' I said roughly, as I repelled her caresses; and then, looking wistfully at me, she went slowly to the door, glided out, and was gone.

That broke the spell, and I started from my seat, but more angry than ever. I was wroth with her now for obeying me so meekly, and I gently opened the door, to hear her call the maid and tell her to accompany her as far as the Wilsons.

Then I heard them go—heard the girl return, the door close, and I was alone.

Alone? Well not exactly; for, so to speak, I was having an interview with my angry self, as I felt that I was, asking how I could let a feeling of annoyance act upon my better nature, and make me behave as I had to the sweet little girlish being, who, during the six months we had been married, had never looked at me but with the eyes of love.

'Change your things and go after her,' something seemed to say; but I repelled it, threw my writing aside, kicked off my boots, snatched my slippers out of the side-board, thrust the easy chair in front of the cozy fire, threw myself into it, and then with my feet on the fender and my hands in my pockets, I sat, morose, bitter and uncomfortable, gazing at the glowing embers.

'She had no business to go!' I exclaimed. 'She knew I was up all last night, writing that abominable book, and was out of sorts, and ought to have staid.'

Then I reviewed the past half-hour, and grew calmer as I leaned back, knowing as I did, and well, that I forced her to go, poor child, and how miserable she would be.

'She'll forget it among all those people,' I said bitterly; but I did not believe it, and at last I sat there calling myself ass, idiot, blind madman, to plant as I had, the first seed of what might grow into a very upas tree of dissension, and blight the whole of our married life.

'Poor little darling!' I said at last; 'I'll wait up till she comes home, and then tell her how sorry I am for my folly, and ask her forgiveness.'

'But, as a man, can I do that?' I said. 'Will it not be weak?'

'Never mind,' I exclaimed, 'I'll do it! Surely, there can be no braver thing to do than own one's self in the wrong. Life is too short to blur it with petty quarrels. And suppose she was taken ill to-night— my darling whom I love with all my heart? Or, suppose she went too near the fire and her dress caught alight. There, how absurd! Thank goodness, she is in silk, and not in one of those fly-away muslins!'

I sat on, musing and musing, til suddenly there was a buzz outside the house, then the rush of feet. I fancied I heard the word 'fire!' repeated again and again, and turning to the window, there was a glow which lighted up the whole place.

I dashed down stairs and out of the door to find the road thronged, for a house a little lower down was in flames, and, to my horror, I had not taken a dozen steps before I found that it was at our friends, the Wilsons.

There was no engine, but a crowd of excited people, talking eagerly; and just then the fire escape came trundling along the road.

It was quite time, for the house as I reached it was blazing furiously, the flames darting out in long, fiery tongues from half the upper windows, while at several there were people crying piteously for help.

I fought my way through the crowd, and tried to run up to the house, but half-a-dozen officious people held me back; while the men with the fire escape tried to rear it against the house; but it would not reach because of the garden in front so that they had to get the wheels of the escape over the iron railings, and this caused great delay.

'Let me go!' I panted to those who held me. 'Let me go! Some one—some one in the house.'

'You can't do any good, sir,' said a policeman roughly. 'The escape men will do all they can.'

But I struggled frantically and got loose, feeling all the while a horrible despairing sensation, as I knew that my poor darling was one of the shrieking supplicants for help at the upper windows, and that but for my folly I might have saved her.

As I freed myself from those who held me, and ran to the escape, it was to find that the man who had ascended it had just been beaten back by the flames.

'It's no good,' he said, 'we must try the back.'

He was about to drag the machine away when I heard my name called 'Dick! Dick!' in piteous tones; and as I was once more seized, I shook myself free, rushed up the ladder, with the flames scorching and burning my face, and, panting breathless, I reached a window where Emma stood stretching out her hands.

I got astride the sill, the flames being wafted away from me, and threw my arms around her; but as I did so the ladder gave way, burned through by the flames that gushed furiously from the lower window, and I felt that I must either jump, or try to descend by the staircase.

There was no time for thinking, so I climbed in, lifted Emma in my arms, feeling her dress crumble in my hands as I touched her, and the horrible odor of burnt hair rose in my nostrils as I saw her wild and blackened face turned to mine.

'Dick, Dick!' she gasped, 'save me!' and then she fainted.

Fortunately, I was as much at home in the house as in my own, and making for the staircase through flame and smoke, I reached it in safety, but below me was what seemed to be a fiercely blazing furnace.

I recoiled for a moment, but it was my only hope, and I recalled that the lower floor was yet untouched by the fire; it was the one beneath me that was blazing so furiously.

So, getting a good tight grip on my treasure, I rushed down the burning stairs, feeling them crackle and give way as I bounded from one to the other.

It was a fiery ordeal, but in a few seconds I was below the flames, and reached the hall, where panting and suffocating, I struggled to the door, reached it, and fell.

If I could have opened it, I knew we were saved; but I was exhausted, and the hot air caught me by the throat and seemed to strangle me. I raised my hand to the lock, but it fell back. I beat feebly at the door, but there was only the roar of flames to answer me, and I made one more supreme effort, panting and struggling to reach the fastening, I was as it were, dragged back by the weight of the burden I still clasped to my breast.

It was more than human endurance could bear, and I felt that the end was near; and to make my suffering more poignant, Emma seemed to revive, struggling with me for her life, as she kept repeating my name, and clung to me till—

'Dick—dear Dick! wake; pray wake! Are you ill?'

I started up to find Emma clinging to me; and clasping her tightly to my heart, a great sob burst from my breast as I kissed her passionately again and again, hardly able to believe my senses.

'Oh, Dick,' she panted, 'you did frighten me so! I couldn't stay to supper at the Wilsons', dear, for I could do nothing but think about your sitting here, alone, and cross with me. So—so—so, I was so miserable, Dick, and I slipped away and came home to find you lying here, panting and struggling; you would not wake when I shook you. Were you ill?'

'Oh, no, not at all,' I said, as I kissed her again and again, feeling now for the first time sensible of a smarting pain in my foot.

'You've burnt yourself, too, Dick; look at your foot.'

It was quite true; the toe of one slipper must have been in contact with the fire, and it was burned completely off.

'But Dick, dear Dick,' she whispered, nestling closer to me, 'are you very, very angry with your little wife for being such a girl?'

I could not answer, only thank God that my weak fit of folly was past, as I clasped her closer and closer yet.

'Emma,' I whispered at last in a husky voice, 'can you forgive me for being so weak?'

I could say no more for the hindrance of two soft lips placed upon mine; and while they rested there I made a vow, I hope I shall have strength to keep; for real troubles are so many, it is folly to invent the false.

At last, when I was free, I took the rose from where it was nestled in her hair and placed it in my pocket-book, while, in answer to the inquiring eyes that were bent on mine, I merely said—

'For a memento of a dreadful dream.'

By the way, I never finished that pamphlet.

Mr. Charles Breck, the Town Treasurer of Milton, who is an old weather observer, says that in the famous "cold summer" of 1816 the frost did not come until the end of September, though there was frost in June. In the year 1842 there was a heavy frost here on the 2nd of June; but heavy frost so early as this year in August, is not recorded at any previous time.—Beacon.

Waiting on the Combination.

A country editor, who had procured a Hall's safe on an advertisement, is toying with the combination. Man waiting to collect a bill.

"Eighteen times slow, to the right, stop at 32 1-2," the editor soliloquizes.

"Copy!" yells the boy who sets up the paper.

Hastily abandoning the safe, the editor cuts a half-column article from an exchange, marks it "editorial," hands it to the boy, and returns to the combination.

"Let's see," he muses: "stop at 32 1-2. Yes, that's right. Now then, to the left fifteen times slow, past 32 1-2, stop at 16 3-4;" and then, looking up at the collector, he paused and inquired: "How much is that bill of yourn?"

"Two dollars."

"Can't you come in to-morrow? I haven't any change about me, and I don't like to ask you to wait until I open my safe."

"Just as leave wait as not," responded the collector.

"Besides," continued the editor, "I haven't anything less than a $100-bill in the safe. Break a hundred dollar note?"

"Yes, two of 'em," was the disheartening response.

"All right. Lemme see, 16 3-4.—Then to the right past that — but hold up! seems to me half that bill was to be taken out in advertising. How is that?"

"No such thing."

"Sure?"

"Yes, I am."

"Very well. Then to the right past 16 3-4 fourteen times to the left, stop at 75. Look here," to the collector, "better come in to-morrow. This is an accommodation combination—stops at all the stations, and besides that, it's flagged every few minutes," he added, as the boy called him out to see "that woman with some more poetry."

Thirty-five minutes later he appeared with an armful of mixed poetry.

"You couldn't wait till I read this," he asks; "or, maybe, you'd like to skim through it yourself?" he added.

But the collector said he felt fainty like, and would just sit still and wait until the safe was opened.

"Oh! you will, will you? Correct—75, then to the right past 75 thirty-eight times slow, stop at 99; then to the left past 99 168 times, stop at 43; then to the right past 53. Say! I'd ruther you'd come in to-morrow. I'm a little pushed for time. Can't wait? Then to the right past 43 622 times, stop at 13. This is a long stretch of country I'm going over now," said the editor, as he whirled the knob, "but when I get to 23 I'll be nearly half through—confound it, I've passed it! Have to begin all over now. Eighteen times slow to the right, stop at 32 1-2—"

"Hold on there! Stop right where you are," interposed the collector; "I will call in some time next month:" and he left.

"It's my opinion that no newspaper office is complete without one of these combination lock safes," soliloquized the editor, as he deftly turned the knob twice, opened the safe and got out his last cigar.

New Yorkers, with magnificent condescension, discern merit in Boston, as they move toward the sea or the mountains. Our clean street-cars especially impress them, for in their own metropolitan vicinage many a car is doomed never to be clean, and has no sweetness to contribute to the strictly exclusive air. To ride in a car which offends no sense, and to be rarely called upon to witness brutality in passengers or officials—this is an experience which the crowded New York lines do not afford. The frog pond may be derided, and other precious possessions may be treated with levity, but our street-cars can claim a superiority which even the Knickerbocker acknowledges.—Boston Advertiser.

A well-dressed youth recently entered a railway car, and passing by several containing each but one male occupant proceeded to where a young lady sat alone, and asked her if the vacant seat at her side was engaged. Answering in the negative, she offered him the inside seat near the window, which he graciously accepted; then she quietly picked up her satchel, and leaving him to his own reflections she sat with a lady behind her. The young man blushed to his ears, and those who witnessed his discomfiture smiled all all over their faces.

Rev. Henry Morgan has been sued by Francis V. Keefe of Boston, wife of Joseph P. Keefe, claiming $25,000 damage for alleged false and malicious libel, in charging her with the crime of adultery under the name of "Rose Delany" and "Rosie," in "Boston Inside out."

This declaration must refer to the party who held a picnic in this historic town a short time since. Yes, the Tewksbury party must go, but at present it is rather uncertain as to where it is going.—Hingham Journal.

The visit of Nemo Encampment, I. O. O. F., last Thursday was a grand success. They arrived about 9 o'clock, and after a reception and drive through the city, they dined at the Essex House and at 2 o'clock reformed for a parade. Passing the house of Mayor Hill, they stopped for lunch at the residence of Patriarch Frank Cousins, who entertained them in his usual liberal manner. They then took horse cars to the Willows, where supper was served at the Pavilion, by W. P. Davis. In the evening there were fireworks and a good time generally. The Encampment were accompanied by the Albany City Band, which is one of the finest ever heard in this city.

The Cook's Dilemma.

"Two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar and one of soda to a quart of flour" was formerly the standing direction in every kitchen for making light biscuit, cake, etc. It has been found of late that the old rule won't work, double this quantity of cream of tartar being frequently required to produce the former result, and even then, owing to the great variation in strength of the best cream of tartar that can be purchased at the stores, uniform results can no longer be depended upon in its use.

The cause of this inferiority of modern cream of tartar is explained by the Massachusetts State Board of Health, and also by the New York State Board of Health, which, in a recent examination of 27 samples of cream of tartar, claimed by dealers to be of the best quality, found them adulterated with alum, terra alba, phosphate of calcium, etc., from 3 to 93 per cent. Five samples were adulterated with terra alba to such an extent that they were really terra alba with a little cream of tartar added. In the soda examined, from 17 per cent. of carbonate of lime to 25 per cent. of ground gypsum were found. Of course it is impossible to produce light or wholesome bread with such stuff as this for a leavening material, and the best cooks, if relying upon its use, must frequently fail in their work. The old formula, therefore, no longer to be relied upon, must give way to new methods.

Science, fortunately, comes to the aid of the cook in this dilemma with the ever-ready baking powder; but here again the greatest care is necessary in selecting a baking powder, to avoid one that may not only spoil the work of the cook but will make the cookery produced an instrument of danger to the health. Most of the baking powders and bread preparations of the market are made either from the very cream of tartar above described, from alum, which is poison, or from phosphates derived by disgusting processes from the solution of old bones in sulphuric acid, and hence their use is attended with the same inconvenience and dangerous results that follow the use of adulterated cream of tartar. The only way to overcome these difficulties would seem to be in the selection of a baking powder of a thoroughly well established reputation, whose absolute purity, wholesomeness, and effective power as a leavening agent have been confirmed beyond contravention. The Royal Baking Powder meets this want more nearly than any other, and has been recommended by the Government chemist as the most acceptable and perfect substitute for the old-fashioned cream of tartar and soda. It is undoubtedly pure, and its merits have given it a sale probably equaling that of all other baking powders combined. Its manufacturers have an advantage over all others in possessing facilities for obtaining pure materials. They refine their cream of tartar direct from the imported crude grape acid by means of patented processes, exclusively their own, by which the cream of tartar is rendered absolutely pure and uniform in strength. In addition to this, they employ a number of expert chemists who thoroughly test every pound of ingredient used, and admit no material into the Royal Baking Powder compound until they have demonstrated it chemically pure. As a consequence, the action of this powder is always uniform, as well as of the highest degree of power, and never fails to produce light, sweet, wholesome and palatable bread, biscuit or cake. With its universal market, and the great magnitude of its sales, this company finds it to its interests to adopt these extraordinary methods, which no baking powder maker whose market is limited to a single State or locality can afford.

SHE WAS SATISFIED.—"Ten cents for sich a little mite of paregoric as that!" she growled, as she held up the phial.

"Yes'm."

"Has paregoric riz?"

"No."

"But I've often got double this amount for ten cents. You must have made seven cents clear profit."

"I made exactly eight, madam."

"Madam," replied the druggist, as he pasted on the label, "if I should accidentally poison your husband to-morrow you would want $500 in cash.

"Yes, all of that."

"Well, I haven't got but $450, and am in a hurry to make up the remainder, so I can put the cash right in your hands without waiting. I'm not the man to cheat a poor widow out of $500 these hard times."

"Oh, that's it, is it? Well, you talk like an honorable man, and I'm glad you explained."—Wall Street News.

Adding injury to insult: A tall, stylish looking woman, leading a greyhound, passed the balcony of a Saratoga hotel, on which two gentlemen were standing. "What a beautiful creature," said one of them in a voice which proved loud enough for her to hear. Turning very red in the face she glanced angrily at the speaker and said: "You have no right to insult me, sir." "Excuse me, madam," he replied, "but you flatter yourself. I was alluding to your dog."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The gentleman who wrote us, that because he received all the papers in his own county (Essex) free, he could not renew his subscription to the Telegraph & Pioneer, was in error, for we know of one paper in that county he does not receive on such terms. He probably meant the city of Lynn where he resides, and having confined himself principally to Lynn literature, the idea has crept into his brain that Lynn alone formed the County of Essex. A mistake that politically won't work.—Chelsea Telegraph.

Justice to Massachusetts demands that the published hearing on the Tewksbury almshouse should be read and studied by her people. It will be found that there is nothing in it for which she as a community has need to apologize. If there is anything in it offensive and disgusting, if there are some passages which decent men cannot read aloud in the hearing of modest women, all such passages are not the record of mismanagement or neglect, but they are the scandalous and false and foul aspersions of the accuser.—*Col. The Peculiar Old Mystery!

It was one of the peculiarities of the old-fashioned Doctors that they never would tell patients what they were prescribing for them. They said it would do the patients no good to know, and that it would only be gratifying a foolish curiosity. In order to keep patients from knowing, they would write the prescriptions in dog-Latin, so that most patients could not read them. All that sort of thing is now over. The patient wants to know what he takes. He is weak, and wants to be strong, or he is dyspeptic, and wants to digest well. Or he has a troublesome liver which he wants to put to rights. So he takes Brown's Iron Bitters about which there is no mystery at all. This is the best preparation of iron in the world, in combination with gentle yet efficient tonics. It gives strength. It builds up enfeebled systems. It enriches impoverished blood. It removes feminine weaknesses. It casts out debility. It is what YOU want, and your druggist has it. 2

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

ONE WOULD think by reading the Boston Globe that the Butler party had been in power for the last twenty years, instead of this year being the only one, with two other solitary exceptions, in the life of the State. Truly, the spoils they have secured in this short time hath made them mad.

THE CLINTON Courant wisely says that it is hard to say why Faxon, on temperance principles, was willing to take Charles Francis Adams, Jr., and not Henry L. Pierce. Is there so much difference between Boston wine and Quincy wine? This is a point no one but Faxon can answer.

COL. Haskell will be renominated by the Republicans from this Councillor district, and he should be elected. Very strenuous efforts will be made by the opposition to defeat him, because he has proved himself to be a man whom Gen. Butler could not use. Such kind of men as Haskell are needed to represent the voters of this county—of firm convictions and not afraid to stand by them.

THE SUDDEN love of papers like the Lynn Bee for the prohibitory party, and the advice they give for them to stick to their principles and stand up for the cause and be counted, is rich. They have entertained, since the convention, a greater respect for these men. They know every vote for Almy is a help to them. But it won't work. The temperance people, as a rule, are satisfied with Robinson.

WE ARE truly sorry for the greenbackers. They did not dare, yesterday, to assert their independence of the democratic party by leaving the name of Gen. Butler from the head of their ticket. The rest of the ticket is composed of men representing the party. In taking Butler they vote for a man who declares that their mission is ended, and follow the lead of another who advises them to hold their principles firmly, but keep them quiet for this year.

This for a body of men who claim to be the future salvation of this county, and who compare themselves and their work to the old anti-slavery party in its first beginnings, must be humiliating. They have identified themselves again, this year, with the democrats. They have shown that it is not principle, but the election of one man that they are fighting for. In this, they can only succeed with the democrats. They have repudiated their old leader in this county, not because he is not a greenbacker at heart, and one of their ablest advocates of labor and paper currency, but because he has repudiated Butler. This shows, in one word, the animus of the convention, and of the party. It is not principles, but men.

IN THE few columns of the PRESS devoted to the editorial department of the paper, may be found during the next six weeks more of political matter than at other times. But inasmuch as there are twenty-five columns of reading matter, not political, in nearly every issue, the general reader will, we hope, find that they are not neglected. But we think, on the whole, our readers are interested in the issue this fall in our State. They ought to be, and there can be no neutral ground for a newspaper in the contest. Some of our best citizens, whom we respect and with whom we are friends, do not agree with us politically. We desire to treat them and the party they represent with courtesy. We regret—all good men do—that personalities are ever brought into a campaign, as they must be this fall. But it is because the issue is not the principles which any of the existing parties represent. Does Gen. Butler represent the democratic party? Which of the points at issue between this party and its opponents will be advanced by his election? Does he represent the National party? Notwithstanding their support of him, he adds no strength to the party, and even by the admission of Litchman, the principles for which they are fighting must be held in abeyance this year. It is therefore because we know that the leaders of both these parties only vote for him under protest, and because they see no other way to defeat the Republicans, that we urge upon our readers that there is no principle involved in his defeat. The only question is whether the people are satisfied with the administration of the present year. When they stop and think, we do not believe they are.

THEY ARE having lively times in the town of Clinton, in reference to schools. One of the papers there conceived the idea of interviewing each of the clergymen there on the subject of "Moral Teaching in Schools," and publishing the result of each interview. Some of the clergymen took the ground that more time should be devoted to the teaching of morals, and less to the branches which are usually thought important in the schools. From discussing the question in print, these pastors have taken it up in their pulpits, and four of them, by preconcerted arrangement, preached on the subject. Whether their suggestions were right or wrong this method did not strike the people very favorably, and a correspondent of the Courant raps their knuckles very sharply in the following manner:—"Christ and the apostles stuck to the Gospel. They did not try to regenerate institutions, but men; nor attempt to correct faults in society or state, but to convert men. That is exactly what we want of the apostles that are settled over us. We don't care what Rev. Mr. A. thinks about the Massachusetts school system, nor what Rev. Mr. B. thinks about the development hypothesis, nor what Rev. Mr. C. thinks about total abstinence and tariff. We know as much about these things as they do, and some of us a good deal more. We want to know what messages Revs. A. B. and C. have received from the Lord. We don't want opinion, we want facts—facts direct from on high. We wish these ministers would conspire to preach that men need to be saved, and that God is able and willing to save them; and we should like to have them keep up this sort of preaching till there is a revival in these churches, homes and Sunday schools of original apostolic religion, and then we are not afraid but what the school question, and all matters kindred to it, will adjust themselves in a manner that will be to the good of men, and the weal of the commonwealth."

NO ONE who was present at the Republican State Convention last Wednesday, could fail to discover the earnest determination represented in the bearing of the delegates to succeed in the work which they that day began. The Boston Globe may sneer at the lack of enthusiasm, and may make their readers believe them when they say that the speech of Col. Codman fell flat; but they will convince no one who was present there.

We believe future events will show the wisdom of the Convention in the selection of the head of the ticket. That he was forced upon them, that he was the only man left for them to nominate, is not true. We are of the opinion that there is a question whether he was not the first choice of the Convention. The opposition to him arose from the unwillingness to deprive his district of his services in Congress.

It was a serious question to be determined. If some other man could be selected, equally strong, equally able to serve the State,—this was the doubt and this the opposition, in a large measure, to his nomination. What his real strength in the convention would have been, had Mr. Pierce not declined, will never be known. The delegates were not pledged, and while it was thought in the vicinity of Boston that Pierce would have been nominated on the first ballot, we think the enthusiasm manifested at the nomination of Robinson shows that he had more friends in the Convention than some had supposed.

We are not taking for granted that the ticket put in nomination last Wednesday can be elected without work, and hard work. We realize that a stronghold is to be attacked, which is firmly entrenched, and will be valiantly defended. But of one thing we are sure. The republican party will make no such fight as last year. And if the adherents of Butler delude themselves with the idea that we shall not poll our full vote this year, or that the reserve of last year—and there was a large reserve vote—will not be brought out, they will be awakened from that fond hope on the morning after election. Whatever else we do not do, the opponents of Butler will this year stand shoulder to shoulder, and will number in their ranks many who did not vote at all last year, and many who did not vote with them last year.

The majority of the thinking people of this State, who love the spirit of her institutions, and who realize how she has been slandered, do not wish to vote for Gov. Butler. We refer to men not in our own party, but in the greenback and democratic as well. Many of these men may vote for him; many may not have courage enough to bolt his nomination. But that they feel that he represents, in any manner, the principles of their party, or that anything will be gained save a few spoils and a nominal victory, if he is elected, we do not believe. We do not believe he will obtain the solid vote of either the greenback or democratic party in this State.

We are therefore encouraged to hope that the sober, good sense of the people will say we have had enough of Butler. It is sad to think that a large portion of his followers are not those who think for themselves. They are led by magnetism, by love of his daring or "cheek," and not by what he has done or can do for the State. Many of them could not define for us the simplest questions of civil government, but they can all hurrah for Butler. And, we repeat, it is sad to think that in Massachusetts, it is possible for these men to be in the majority.

Might does not make right. And it is not right that a man who has been in nearly every political party from the beginning of his public career, who is an advocate of fiat money at one time, and at another telling the party who once believed in him that "their mission is accomplished," who is as much of a capitalist as any of the so called monopolists, but who represents himself as a friend of the laboring men—it is not right that this man should represent Massachusetts, as a worthy successor of those who have preceded him in the high office of Governor.

THE CAMPAIGN has been well opened by an enthusiastic reception tendered Candidate Robinson on his return to Chicopee. It is natural that his native town should share with him the honor of the nomination. It is to be supposed that his greeting would be more hearty from his neighbors and friends—those who knew him best. But his welcome was such an ovation as few public men in the country could obtain, the remembrance of which can not fail to cheer him during the active labors of the campaign. Men of all parties turned out to greet him, and the day, Sept. 20th, was to him auspicious, as it was the same day, Sept. 20th, in which he commenced life at Chicopee, some twenty-seven years previous.

Mr. Robinson is known throughout the western part of the State as a plain, self reliant man. He is a man of the people. He commenced life in Chicopee as a school master, afterwards studying and practicing law, and rising from a place in the house and senate of Massachusetts to his present position as representative in Congress. His first friends have been constant ones; among his heartiest supporters are his former pupils at the old school house. Since then, in all his services to his constituents, he has been ever the same. This is a record of which any man may be proud.

In Congress he is the same faithful servant. He is not a rich man. "Let no man say," he remarks to his townsmen, "that I am the candidate of the monopolist, the candidate of anybody's purse. The men who labor are the bone and sinew of the State, its dependence in time of need." He spends no money in election, having been elected to Congress by a goodly majority, obtaining his election by his personal popularity, secured by his presence on the stump and by going in and out among his constituents. At Washington he does not entertain; he rarely attends dinners. If at all, he retires early, with a clear head. His family is not at the Capital, and on the adjournment of Congress, the next day finds him in Chicopee at his own fireside. On committees he devotes himself to the work, and to ascertaining in all its bearings, the duties which that work calls forth. As a consequence, he is thoroughly posted; and he is seldom absent from the House. He is personally a total abstainer from wine; but he is not an advocate of the principle of prohibition; feeling that the time has not come when such a law would be sustained by the people.

This is the man whom we are asked to vote for this fall. As he becomes better known to the Eastern part of the State, he will be as heartily received as in his own home. It is not surprising, therefore, to find the entire party harmonious in his support. Those who were Crapo men last fall, and who stayed away from the polls because their favorite was defeated—and there were lots of them—are satisfied with the nomination. The so-called Independents, including those who are represented by Chas. F. Adams, Jr., are satisfied. The temperance people, excepting possibly a few of the most radical in the prohibitory party, are satisfied. Strangest of all, Faxon is satisfied.

The honor of our candidate is a guarantee that his election will be a return to the old time governors of our beloved state. The office has sought the man, as it ever has in the case of Mr. Robinson. In the words of Col. Codman, "in the contest now impending we shall take no tone of apology, for we have no excuses to make, but we shall be the aggressive champions of the good name of Massachusetts. We shall raise before our advancing hosts the spotless flag of her character and honor, "that stainless banner white," which has been dragged through the mire, but which is still unsullied, and by that sign we shall conquer!"

The following is the platform adopted by the Republican State Convention last Wednesday:

In presenting to the people of Massachusetts its candidates for state offices, the Republican party does not deem it necessary to this year offer any formal s atement of political principles. In national affairs we believe in equal rights and fairly counted vote— a thoroughly pure and reformed civil service beyond the reach of party conflicts—a sound currency based on an honest specie dollar—a liberal, but in no wise extravagant or wasteful expenditure—a largely reduced taxation—and wise and well-matured laws to protect and develop American industry and enterprise, both at home and on the ocean. We endorse the administration of President Arthur as wise, conservative and patriotic. As respects state affairs we continue to believe in a widely diffused education—an ever higher standard of temperance legislation—a pure and extended suffrage—equal taxation—an intelligent recognition of the rights of labor as well as of capital, and we would take no step backward in regard to those philanthrophic, charitable and educational institutions, in the constant development of which our beloved commonwealth has ever been foremost. All these things we have many times asserted, and we appeal to the gradual and steady progress, unmistakably apparent through the records of the last quarter of a century, both in state and nation, as proof that we have not asserted them in vain. We stand ready to assert them now, and to maintain them also. Meanwhile we do not believe in that political charlatanry, which makes a business of sham reform, indiscriminately treating great moral and humanitarian questions, public offices and public issues as counters in a game, the sole end of which is one man's political preferment; neither can we patiently see methods of political corruption unknown here before, introduced into our state and municipal governments. Unless checked here and now, these methods will surely bring the politics of Massachusetts to a level which we have seen elsewhere and have not been slow to vigorously denounce. This year, therefore, the work of reform for us begins at home. The issue is well understood. We propose to blot out, in so far as we may, the record of the most discreditable year in the history of the State. It is a time, not for many words, but for decisive action. We present, therefore, our candidates as men simply pledged, if elected, to carry the administration of affairs back to those better days when our public m n were not first to traduce the state, but, if the state were traduced by others, were ready to stand up, as did Webster once, saying, with honest pride,—"Massachusetts, there she is, Behold her and judge for yourselves"

The everlasting amount of political wisdom which the "Penny dreadfuls," as the Marblehead Messenger calls them, grind out so continuously about the political out look in this town, and the people prominently mentioned for Representative, must be really amusing or disgusting to those who are really interested and know what is going on and whose experience teaches them to keep their projects to themselves.

At the Greenback Convention held yesterday the following were nominated for State officers: For Governor, Gen. B. F. Butler; Lieutenant Governor, N.S.Cushing of Middleboro; secretary of state, Nicholas Furlong of Boston; attorney-general, George Foster of Lynn; treasurer and receiver-general, Wilborn F. Whitney of Ashburnham; auditor, A. H. Wood of Lunenburg.

Worcester must go,—in fact she has gone as a place for holding political conventions. The star of Springfield rises over that way station on the Boston and Albany railroad. Senator Johnson's motion to hold the next republican convention in the heart of the commonwealth was greeted with derisive laughter.—Springfield Republican.

The nomination of Butler to-day by the democrats, at Springfield, was a matter of course.

Workmen in the street department have been busy picking up stones. There is probably no street in town that shows the effects of the dry weather as Endicott. A provision team driving through there rapidly last Monday broke two bolts.

Every man who expects to vote in November, should see to it that he is assessed before the first day of October. If he has not yet received his tax bill, it would be well to make inquiries of the assessors, to see whether his name has not been omitted.

More strenuous measures are necessary to preserve the peace in "Dublin," as Sunday rows are of weekly occurrence. Last Sunday a little after 4 o'clock, a small riot took place in the vicinity of Tremont street and numerous black eyes were the result.

Frank C. Ferguson, of this town, has been putting in new gearing in the bark mill of Plumer & Kearns, Danversport. The mill is run by water power, and the job was completed in about a week, and everything is now running satisfactorily.

Unless the mothers of a lot of youngsters take time by the forelock and warn their hopefuls of the danger there will be a sad accident for us to record. Nearly every day they are at play about the cars on the freight tracks, and jumping on the moving trains to get a ride.

The annual election of the officers of the Baptist Sunday School was held in the Vestry on Monday evening and the following officers were elected: Supt., Dr. F. A. Gardner; Vice Supt., Mr. P. W. Perkins; Treasurer, Miss Alice C. Hart; Secretary, Mr. Ira Vaughn; Librarian, Mr. Albert P. Chute.

A case of presence of mind was reported this week. A lady living on Central street had an old lantern which she had been using in the cellar a few minutes before, which took fire on the kitchen table and bid fair to do serious harm. She threw it out of the window into the yard and then put it out.

Prof. I. N. Carlton, late principal of the Connecticut State Normal School, is about to open a select home and day school for boys in Bradford, Mass. The school will be both English and classical and limited to less than twenty boarding pupils. Mr. Carlton was formerly principal of our High School.

Some odd things are found among the effects of old people. Mr. Chas. B. Haven, administrator of the estate of the late Archelaus Robinson, has shown us some very old documents, one a will written in 1669, and for the benefit of those who are interested in those old documents we will soon publish it.

All subscribers are invited to send us notes of local interest from their respective neighborhoods, such as sickness, deaths, marriages, accidents, fires, new buildings, property sales, or anything of interest to their community, or the general public. By such items the labor of editing a local paper is made much lighter.

"Edwin, I do wish you wouldn't go around in that slovenly manner, with the bottom of your pants caught up on the back of your low quarter shoes. It looks very disreputable." "Well, my dear fiance, that's something men cannot avoid. Our pants hang down so far, you know. In that respect you girls have the advantage of us. Now, you see, your pa—," but she blushed, hid her face in her hands, and skipped out before he could finish his explanatory remarks.—Gilhooley's Etchings.

It is a very rare occurrence for the governor of a state to receive such treatment as was given Benjamin F Butler by the eminent speakers at the republican convention at Boston. Perhaps never before in the history of this country could such language be used and receive the hearty indorsement of all who heard it. It was bitterly caustic, but every word was solid truth. Massachusetts has had enough of Butler.—Hartford Courant.

Why old maids are preferable: "I'm glad Billy had the sense to marry a settled old maid," said Grandma Winkum, at the wedding. "Gals is hity-tity and widders is kinder overrulin' and upsettin'. Old maids is kinder thankful and willin' to please."—Christian at Work.

William Hayes escaped a serious accident this morning on the road to the Willows. He was riding in his buggy, and was thrown violently to the ground near the Juniper House. His team was also damaged.

Died in Peabody, Sept. 26, Annie T. McElligott, age 22 years, 8 months and 15 days. The circumstances of her death are particularly sad, as she is the third daughter that has passed away with that dread disease, consumption. She was an attendant at our public schools for a number of years, and left only to continue her studies in the Sisters school in Salem. She leaves a large circle of young friends. Her funeral will take place next Saturday morning at 8 o'clock, from her late residence 30 Aborn street.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

On Thursday of last week the annual Clam Bake of a party of Peabody friends was held at the summer house of C. A. Thomas at Ipswich Great Neck. The party left here at 7.30 A. M. and arrived at the house at about 9 o'clock. Some immediately set about getting the "bake" underway, while others whiled away the time in roaming over the hills or in boating. The party numbered one hundred and at 1.30 o'clock sat down to a bountiful meal. The "menu" was as follows:—

Ipswich Clams "in shello."
Steamed Corn, Cum grano salis.
Baked Lobster "ad libitum."
Steamed Potatoes, (quantum sufficiat).
Baked Lake Trout, "a la Thomas."
Peaches, "a la Wiley."
Chilled Watermelon, Apples, Pears.
Tea and Coffee.

The day was all that could be wished and at seven o'clock the party arrived home, well pleased with the day's excursion. Too much compliment cannot be paid to Messrs. H. W. and C. A. Thomas, by whose efforts the whole affair was projected and carried through to a successful termination.

It is wonderful what great exertions a very innocent little policemen's whistle in the hands of a boy, who is concealed, will cause our vigilant police. The other day people in the vicinity of the square were startled by the shrill notes of the aforesaid whistle, and at the same time the chief of police was seen to make double quick time across the square, in the direction of the railroad station, while Captain Barnaby rushed around the corner, club in hand, each supposing the other had called. And it is said that special officer Cummings turned in bed uneasily, but did not awaken. In the meantime while the police were investigating in the vicinity of Mill street, the boy who blew the whistle on Lowell street quietly walked off. But for all that, the response was prompt.

A carriage containing a couple of apparently gay young men was seen to drive slowly along Main street one night last week. They were stylishly dressed and it was clear they were on a "racket," as they were noticed to flirt with several young ladies on the sidewalk. After driving around town they halted in front of an apothecary store and asked a young man some simple question, and after a few minutes conversation he made a discovery. The gay night hawks were not young men, but young women, dressed in male attire. Recognizing them as a couple of young ladies from Lynn, he called them by their names, which of course they denied and shortly turned their horse's head and drove rapidly toward home.

Garden thieves are active this week, and as the Malden Mirror truly says: "Isn't it a shame to have to sit up nights to protect a melon patch or a peach orchard, or grape arbor? If a thief takes a purse, it is bad enough, but to nurse and watch and tend a bit of choice fruit, a new kind, perhaps, that has cost years of thought and experiment to bring forth, and then to have it snatched from your grasp by stealth, is ten times worse. It shakes our faith in men, and especially in boys and schools, and makes us almost doubt if there has been any great gain in morals and civilization itself. To be sure the law is strong enough to punish, but it is of slight use to shut the door of the cage after the bird has flown.

Mr. George Griffin, bookkeeper at the well known grocery store of Bushby & Co., was united in marriage at noon yesterday, to Miss Julia B. Bradford, daughter of Mr. John M. Bradford. The ceremony took place at the residence of the bride's parents and Rev. W. G. Sperry performed the ceremony. The newly wedded couple left immediately for Portsmouth, N. H., where a reception was given them at the home of the groom's parents last evening. They received many valuable tokens of remembrance from their friends. Mr. Griffin's many friends here wish him and his newly-found bride abundant success on their journey along life's rugged pathway.

At the Greenback caucus last Wednesday evening, Richard Kimball was elected chairman and Edward E. Boxwell, secretary. The following were elected delegates to the State Convention: Edward Trask, Benjamin F. Stevens, Charles H. Fernald, Lewis S. Peabody, Wm. F. Sumner, Richard Kimball, Martin Quinlan, Ira Foster. Delegates to the county, councillor and senatorial conventions: Joseph H. Swett, Patrick Kerwin, John G. Walcott, James F. Sullivan, Henry Lufkin, Edwin E. Boxwell, Luther Fernald, Richard Kimball, Edward Trask, H. J. G. Kimball, Dennis Sweeney, Michael F. Horgan.

Monday morning report was current that there had been a genuine prize fight on Sunday evening in Peabody, not a great many miles from the gravel pit above Highland Park. The parties belonged in Salem, and the arrangement was bare knuckles, and four rounds, each round to last three minutes. Some one gave the signal and the pugilists were in the ring. "Make ready." "Come down" and the wicked crowd looked on as they went at it in professional style. In the first round the slugging continued until "time" was called. In the second, the fire flew until "time" was called again. The third round brought the side show to a close by one of the combatants being knocked out of time, and not being willing to come in again. Our pugilistic reporter, who had recently returned to town, says there was little noise made but considerable interest manifest.

The Committee appointed to investigate the charge brought against the officers of the Fire Department, of receiving commissions on all purchases of fire hose and supplies made for said Department of the American Fire Hose Manufacturing Co., find the charge was first made by a Fire Hose agent, not a resident of the town. The Committee held five meetings, and find, after a thorough investigation, the charge cannot be sustained by any testimony available to the Committee.

Peabody, Sept. 25, 1882.

Last Saturday as three men employed on the Eastern Railroad were returning on the So. Reading branch to the square, they met with a serious accident in this way. They were on a hand car which was followed by another loaded with sleepers. When near March street crossing, one of them put on the brake so suddenly as to derail the car, and the car that was following collided with it. One of the men, named Sullivan, had his ankle fractured and another named Callahan was injured by being struck with a sleeper in the chest. Dr. Shanahan attended them.

The Baptist anniversary concert last Sunday evening was very interesting and largely attended. The report of the Secretary, which was read, was as follows: Total number of officers, 7; teachers, 17; adults, 118; primary, 42; making 184 as the total membership of the school. The average attendance during the year was 104. There have been no deaths in the school the past year. The Librarian's report was as follows: Whole number of volumes in Library, 264; number taken out, 1882, as follows: Adults, 902; intermediate, 980; making an average for each Sabbath, adults, 18; intermediate, 20; total, 38.

Mercury is the only planet that appears as evening star during all the month of September, although Venus was an evening star after the 20th, and Uranus until the 16th. On the 20th, Venus was in superior conjunction with the sun, and is for a time lost to sight in its rays. It has taken her ever since the 6th of December to reach the opposite portion of her orbit as seen from the earth. She was at the time of her memorable transit in inferior conjunction, passing directly between us and the sun, with her dark side toward us.

The new Catholic Order of Foresters of this town have elected the officers as follows: Chief ranger, Edward C. Ralph; vice chief ranger, Wm. J. McCarthy; recording secretary, John W. McBride; inside sentinel, John Canny; outside sentinel, Timothy Sheehan; trustees, John Canny, Patrick Butler, Matthew Joy; court chaplain, Rev. John E. Hickey; court physician, Dr. J. Shanahan.

Fitch Poole Council A. L. of H., will celebrate the second anniversary of its nativity, on Friday evening next, in Upton's Hall. Grand Commander, C. H. Litchman, of Marblehead, Past Grand Commander, D. B. Kimball, of Salem, are expected to be present. The officers of Reuben Keniston Council, of Beverly, have been invited to come with their lady friends and a good time is expected. Musical and literary exercises by good talent, will be furnished, and a banquet will form a prominent attraction.

A new lock for mail pouches will go into use simultaneously with the new two-cent letter postage stamp on Oct. 1. Fifty thousand keys have been sent out to Postmasters and other persons authorized to have them. They were sent in separate registered envelopes, and every one of them reached its destination. Two hundred thousand of the new locks have been distributed. They are corrugated steel, and are lighter and said to be stronger than those now in use.

Though one of the short months, ("thirty days hath September, etc.,") this month has five Saturdays and five Sundays. A remarkable fact.

The natural propensity of some people to steal is wonderful, and not satisfied with the opportunities to do it at home, they go away and by wrong doing bring discredit on our town as seen by the following from the Beverly Citizen: Three Peabody parties, one woman and two men, were discovered at about ten o'clock last Tuesday evening stealing fruit from Mr. Chas. Kilham's garden on Central street. They left town on the half-past ten car for Salem.

Last Monday morning a fish monger from Beverly left his team standing in front of a house on Union street, and when he returned he could find no trace of it. By inquiring he followed it into English and Harris streets, where he caught sight of it with two young fellows in possession. One of them was in the act of dressing a fish for a customer, but catching sight of the owner they both fled. Pretty cheeky piece of business.

The change of teachers announced this week are in the Center school.—Miss Poole takes again her old school or the one vacated by Miss Price, and Miss Maggie Poor, who was Miss Poole's assistant, takes the lowest primary, with Miss Eva Raddin as assistant. This school numbers 106 pupils. In the Wallis school Miss Hatch has resigned, and her place has been supplied by Mrs. Williams, an experienced teacher.

Mr. Chas. E. Galeucia has recently finished a bicycle, which represents the spare moments of over a year. It is about 50 inches in diameter, and, with the exception of some parts that had to be forged, of which, however, he made the patterns in wood, and the rubber tire, it has been made and put together entirely by him. It is a fine piece of machinery, and reflects credit upon the workmanship of Mr. Galeucia.

Mr. B. F. Hutchinson has on exhibition at his store a large vegetable raised by Mr. Wagner, on Franklin street. It resembles a turnip, but Mr. John Hart, the very truthful clerk, told us it was a cross between a cucumber and a watermelon. But then, our confidence is not strong in a man who, when asked for a "couple of quarters for a half," will pass out two silver quarters, and take half a copper cent in exchange.

The long looked for and sadly needed rain began to fall about 1.30 Monday afternoon, but the sun shone out once after that, and it was not until about 3.30 P. M., that the storm really amounted to anything. From that hour until about midnight rain fell at times quite heavily, but the total precipitation only amounted to about three-fourths of an inch, not a tithe of what is needed.

Probably the largest reservoir for private use in town is that recently built by Mr. N. M. Quint, for Mr. A. B. Clark at the head of Union street. It is 14x22 feet and 18 feet deep, and contained before the rain some 7 feet of water. Mr. Clark believes that he will receive sufficient supply to furnish his factory with all the water necessary to carry on his extensive business.

One day last week a man walked into the house of Mrs. David Porter on Webster street and asked for something to eat. A piece of bread and butter was given him and he impudently sat down in the kitchen to eat it. The lady in charge didn't like that and she said to the tramp, "now you git, we don't want you round here." He saw fire in her eye and didn't dwell.

This afternoon a horse attached to a tip cart, belonging to Philip T. Nelson, ran away from his tan yard, on Crowninshield street, and dashed down Lowell street, across the square and down Mill street, striking the freight depot of Munroe & Arnold, knocking off one wheel and clearing himself from the harness. He was finally stopped on Wallis street.

At the sale by Mr. Odell, Monday afternoon at the Poor estate, eight lots were sold near Tremont street, Peabody, and the rain then broke up the sale. The sales were,—one lot to Mr. McDuffie, $50; two to I. Cuddire, $80 and $97.50; two to M. Meegan, $67.50 and 75; two to Edmund Austin, $45 and $70; one to William Hayes, $55.

The first accident in the track of the Lynn horse railroad, was reported last Thursday. As Mr. William Fairfield, of Salem, with a carriage containing, besides himself, three ladies, were crossing the track near the Washington House, one of the hind wheels were wrenched off. It was afterwards fixed up so that they could return home.

Last Thursday forenoon the elegant directors' car, containing the directors and colored servants of the Eastern Railroad came down the Lawrence branch, and made a trip over the So. Reading branch, stopping below the railroad station some time.

Miss Alice B. Chadwick, who lately accepted a position to teach in the Clarendon Hill School, Somerville, was presented with a fine photograph album by her former associates in the Wallis School.

DROWNED IN BEER.
CONCERNING THIS POPULAR BEVERAGE TWO MEN EXPRESS THEIR MINDS.
"The fact is sir, and you may stick a pin there, that the people of this country are likely to be drowned in a flood of lager beer," shouted an enthusiastic teetotaler the other day into the ear of your cornered correspondent. That German drink has struck us hard. It is the second deluge."
"Yes, and the worst of this beer-drinking business is that it gets up kidney troubles, as a heavy wind raises the waves," added a city physician, who had a knowledge of the times and a tendency to metaphor. "The midnight 'schooner' leaves behind it a wake of furred tongues, headaches, torpid livers, nausea, and all that, and lays the foundation of Bright's Disease."
This melancholy fact accounts in part for the increasing sales of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER, which at once mitigates these symptoms. Price 25 cents. Ask your physician about it. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Book Notices.

We have just received a copy of the "Bad Boy and His Pa," from J. C. Groene & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio. It is a good comic song and chorus, by the popular writer Thos. P. Westendorf, and will become very popular. Ask your music dealer for it, or send to the publishers for a copy. Price, 40 cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S Popular Monthly for October, is even more brilliant than usual; the contents are replete with information, interest and entertainment. Mr. Kimball contributes a very interesting history of "The Bank of the United States;" Noel Ruthven an article entitled "Oxford;" E. J. Tanner one on the "Manufacture and Uses of Leather," each profusely illustrated. In the department of fiction are, a continuation of the serial, "True to Untruth," short stories by K. V. Hastings, Millie W. Carpenter, etc. There are interesting sketches, poems of great merit—several beautifully illustrated, and an abundant miscellany. Only 25 cents a number, or $3 a year, post paid. Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

BALLOU'S Magazine for October contains a remarkable list of contents. Besides "The Belle of Australia," by William H. Thomes, there are some thirty different stories and poems, in addition to illustrations and humorous matters, household and ladies' work. We see it announced that, as soon as "The Belle" is finished, the author, Mr. Thomes, will commence a new story, "On Sea and Shore, or California in the years 1843, '44 and '45." The author spent three years on the coast, collecting hides, and met with many remarkable adventures while in the country; all of which will be stated in a truthful, practical manner. Those interested in California should read this serial. Published by Thomes & Talbot, 23 Hawley Street, Boston, at $1.50 per annum, or 15 cents a single copy. Send ten cents for a specimen copy, and you will not regret it.

LIPPINCOTT'S Magazine for October is especially rich in articles on travel. Alfred M. Williams, in "The Giants of the Plain," describes the habits and customs of the Osage Indians, Louise Coffin Jones sketches the "Highlands of North Carolina," and F. B. De Costa has a timely contribution entitled "A Trip to Ischia," the scene of the recent volcanic eruption. "These Our Actors," by L. Clarke Davis, is a bright and gossipy paper upon the comedians who make up Mr. Daly's famous Fifth Avenue Company. Frank D. Y. Carpenter, having started out "In Search of a Free-Trader," comes to the conclusion that there are no free-traders in this country. "In the Hands of the Mob" is a reminiscence of a thrilling scene in the lawless early days of San Francisco, and "The White-Fish of the Great Lakes," by G. Archie Stockwell, gives an account of one of the great industries of the Northwest. "The Jewel in the Lotos" is as interesting as ever, and there are two capital short stories, "Miss Parkinson's Ward," by Elizabeth Cummings, and "Under False Pretences," by Mabel S. Emery.

The NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW for October presents a most attractive table of contents. Senator N. P. Hill writes of "Gold and Silver as Standards of Value," and maintains that silver should be coined as well as gold. In "Some Aspects of Democracy in England," A. V. Dicey makes clear to the American reader how it is that the democracy absolutely controls the action of the government. Under the title of "Co-operative Distribution," the Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton gives an instructive historical sketch of the rise, progress and fluctuations of co-operative merchandizing in the United States during the past fifty years. Prof. W. Boyd Dawkins writes of "Early Man in America." The possibility of "Astronomical Collisions" is considered by Prof. C. A. Young. Moncure D. Conway discourses entertainingly upon the "Saint Patrick Myth." Van Buren Denslow, in an article on "Board of Trade Morality," makes a vigorous defense of the practices of the Corn Exchange. Frederic Harrison contributes an article on "Histories of the French Revolution." Finally, the Rev. E. E. Hale presents an inventory of the volume and distribution of "Social Forces in the United States." Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York. $5.00 a year, 50 cents a number.

FRESH FROM THE PULPIT.

SAINTS AND SINNERS STIRRED BY A CLERGYMAN'S CONFESSION—THE FACTS IN FULL.

Eloquent writing, merely, convinces nobody. General statements and assertions are cheap. Plain words are best, and come most easily from the mouth of a witness who is conscious that he speaks truth. Let the reader judge if the following have the ring of genuine coin:

"I have long been afflicted with rheumatism, a badly disordered liver and by general debility. All my strength seemed gone. I tried a number of other medicines without obtaining relief, but I do hereby testify to the great merits of PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, since after the use of two bottles I find myself feeling well and strong again—in fact like a new man. I cheerfully recommend it as an excellent strengthening and invigorating Tonic."

Names and dates are of supreme importance Testimonies are readily manufactured, but the foregoing is from a letter dated St Louis, Mo., Aug. 30, 1882, and signed by Rev. Edward Wills, founder of and ex-pastor of the University Street Baptist Church Residence, No. 313 Spruce, that city. From the very fact of their responsible and prominent position, ministers of the Gospel are cautious about giving their signatures or influence to any proprietary medicine or advertised article Hence the value of unsolicited testimonials like the foregoing.

Please note: FIRST—PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not an essense of Ginger. Don't indulge that idea nor permit others to impress it upon you. It combines the choicest Jamaica Ginger with other ingredients—constituting the best Tonic known in medicine; SECOND.—It is pleasant to take and immediate in its action. Prices, 50c. and $1—the latter the more economical. Get it of your druggist, or send for circular to HISCOX & Co., New York.

First Grave Digger—Have you heard why the English dude is not wanted in America? First citizen—No, why? F. G. D.—Because the Yankee Dood'll do.

"In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Do not try with stupid prattle,
To deceive your jealous wife."

A GOOD FRIEND TO THE CHINESE.—San Francisco.—Consul A. F. Bee, of the Chinese Consulate Office, expresses himself clearly in saying that he, as well as his family have suffered severely from rheumatism and neuralgia, and that medicines were used in vain. At last St. Jacobs Oil was tried, which effected immediate cures in every case. The Consul regards the Oil as the greatest pain curing remedy in existence.

There is a town called Prospect, in Connecticut, and when the papers publish a birth and say, "In Prospect, a son to Mr. and Mrs. John Smith, etc., the announcement does seem a little previous.

"Don't play with the devil when you're young, lest you have to work for him when you're old." This is excellent advice and applies to other subjects besides his Satanic Majesty. Don't trifle with Catarrh by using nasal injections and irritants. They only aggravate the disease. They can never cure it. Use Ely's Cream Balm. It is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied. A child can use it without harm, and its effects are speedy and thorough. "I suffered for years with chronic catarrh," writes S. M. Greene, Book-keeper, office N. Y. Catskill & Athens Steamboat Co., Catskill, N. Y. "I was induced to try Ely's Cream Balm, and relief was instantaneous." This exquisite remedy never disappoints. Mail it for 50 cents. (stamps taken). Ely's Cream Balm Co., Owego, N. Y.

An absent-minded editor wrote a love letter and an editorial at the same time. The love letter he sent out to be set up in type by the printers and a long editorial on tariff to his girl. There was fun at both ends of the route.—The Judge.

Watering the stock of a leather-making company is a new form of hide-raulics. It is now positively known why some of the New England leather firms have "gone to the dogs." In several instances the reason is given "they had too much bark."—Pittsburg Telegraph.

All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at the above Drug Store.

A traveling man, noticing a pretty girl alone in the car, went over in her direction, and smilingly asked, "Is this seat engaged, miss?" "No, sir, but I am, and he is going to get on at the next station." "Oh—ah—indeed—thanks—beg pardon—" and he picked up his feet, after stumbling over them, and went into the smoking car to be alone awhile.—Merchant Traveller.

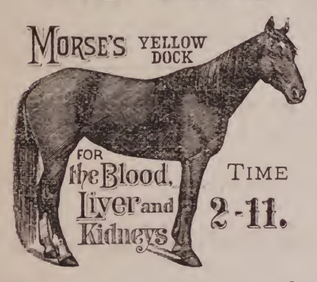
WHAT MRS. BRUCE



OF 25 GRANT ST., SPRINGFIELD, MASS., SAYS ABOUT HER HUSBAND'S SICKNESS, AND WHAT FINALLY PROVED A REAL BOON TO HIM — WORDS OF AN AFFECTIONATE, GOOD WOMAN.

Mrs. Bruce says: "My husband is an employe in the United States Armory in Springfield. He has for years been a terrible sufferer from bilious sick headaches. He has fearful attacks of this kind. Sometimes they will come on him every week or so. He has never found any medicine which would give him any permanent relief or prove any preventive against these severe attacks until he tried Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. He has received the greatest benefit from its use." The testimony of Mrs. Bruce is like that of hundreds of others, who say: "I procured a bottle of Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, and used it with the best of results. I have no more headache or pain in the side. Indeed, the medicine seems to have an almost magical effect, and I feel very grateful for FAVORITE REMEDY. Dr. Kennedy is glad to recommend his medicine to all who are suffering from sick headaches resulting from any of the above causes, for it is a sure, positive cure.

TO KEEP THE BLOOD PURE

is the principal end of inventions and discoveries in medicine. To this object probably no one has contributed more signally than Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., in the production of a medicine which has become famous under the title of the FAVORITE REMEDY. It removes all impurities of the Blood, regulates the disordered Liver and Kidneys, cures Constipation, Dyspepsia and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. Sold by your druggist, $1.00 a bottle.

POLAND, ME., Sept., 1883.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—Many of your readers are not unacquainted with the charming little lake that is nestled down so calm and quiet in the midst of West New Gloucester pines, and it may prove doubly interesting to know that the Lake and its borders were scenes of many thrilling incidents during our early struggles with the French and Indians, and the fact that those same savage foes were instrumental in giving name to this beautiful sheet of water. I connect the names of French and Indian in the same breath from the fact that at the time of which I write, the French exhibited all of the same barbarous ferocity that characterized the savage.

Not alone are the borders of this Lake scenes of grim and solemn councils, savage war-dances, merciless tortures, and, later in our history, the smoking of peace-pipes, but here, also, the red men, swayed by the same instinctive religious superstition that is found in every savage breast, met and worshiped the Great Spirit in their own untaught way, thus bringing into usage the name Sabbath day, or as we now recognize it, Sabba-day Lake. It was here that Joe Weirs, the Scout of Falmouth, now Portland, Me., visited his vengeance upon our red foes, so swift and terrible that his name was a terror to the Indian. It was here he rescued a daughter from captivity, after going in grim silence upon the mutilated remains of a dearly-loved sister and vowing to Heaven, "a scalp for every drop of that precious blood." Here, under cover of night, aided only by the feeble light of the smouldering fire, he crept into the Indian camp, cut the thongs of a beautiful captive maiden and with one stroke severed the scalp of the sleeping guard; placing the girl under the protection of friends in waiting to receive her, he led the Indians by a circuitous trail in an opposite direction and toward the camp, then making another bold dash into it, seized several white scalps from a peg, hung in their place the still bleeding and warm one of the Indian and made his escape with the fearful war-whoops echoing around him on every side. Many are the daring exploits recorded of this famous scout; gentle and forgiving to a fault among his white brethren, but deadly and sure the vengeance, when once his keen scent discovered the trail of the wily foe.

From a little eminence, upon which are located the already famous Centennial Springs, the eye can take in at one sweep the entire surface of Sabba-day Lake which is about two and a half miles long and varying from one-half to three-fourths of a mile in breadth; its numerous coves, fringed darkly and green by the evergreen boughs that grow close to the edge on either side. At the head of the Lake where we stand, the water lays along a little pebbly beach, while the banks along its sides rise so abruptly that we scarcely felt surprised when our friendly oarsman paused in his rowing with the quiet remark "here, ladies, the water you see so smooth and still, lies seventy-five feet deep below you;" and, as we gazed down into its dark depths, made doubly so by the overhanging boughs of pines and the near approach of evening, he added: "and here underneath you, is supposed to lie all that remains of three victims of a drowning accident;" just at that moment, to make the scene more somber still, a loon sent up its mournful cry as it splashed into the water near us, from a little headland called Loon Point, and with a stifled cry from some and an involuntary shudder from all, we begged to be rowed away, and one at least breathed more freely, as we shot out from the shadows of the bank. The lake abounds in fish of different kinds—pickerel, perch, lake-trout and smelts; its outlet is Royals river thence onward to the ocean, through the town of Yarmouth.

Nor do old traditions of Indian depredations, tragic love scenes, Sabbath day worship and its own placid waters that hide so much from mortal's ken, complete its attractiveness, for, circling around it within a circuit of three miles we find two communities of Shakers, faithful followers of Mother Ann Lee, the Poland Springs, the Star spring and the already quite famous Centennial Springs, three in number of different medicinal qualities, owned by a Philadelphia Company whose possessions extend along the right shore of the Lake the distance of a mile or more, through which extensive improvements are in contemplation, notably that of the laying out of a railroad connecting with the M. C. and the G. T. at New Gloucester and the building of a large hotel and private residences. We predict for this little Lake a future history, richer by far in glowing events than its past is in ones that are thrilling, for it is fast gaining a notoriety in addition to the past that will forever perpetuate its memory. Yours Respectfully,

A VISITOR.

To purchase our coal we must go the seller, and the coal, when bought, also goes to the cellar.

Letter from Ohio.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—Last week I visited Toledo, about fifty miles from Norwalk, where we are at present stopping. We spent most of the day on the fair grounds, witnessed a hurdle race by two young ladies and a darkey; it was the most exciting race that I ever saw. Lots of fun for the crowd, horses on the dead run on a course of half a mile round, hurdle four feet jump, best two in three; the ladies won leaving the darkey to the rear each time. They have on the grounds what they call a roller coaster. They take a settee eight feet long with trucks on the legs and have a course one quarter of a mile round, with a elevation about thirty feet from the ground, with a track four feet wide laid with steel rails which the settee fits. The descent is as great as thirty feet to the ground with speed enough on it by the time you get half round; the speed will carry you up to the place you started from and at the rate of ninety miles per hour. We had the pleasure of going down twice, two rides for five cents. It cost some six hundred dollars to build the track; they were just coining money, take six persons on the settee at once and a dozen settees going all the time. I could not tell you one half of the fun we enjoyed on that day, but will speak of the exhibition of vegetables, fancy goods, etc. I never saw such a large variety of vegetables—squashes, potatoes, beets, cabbages, onions, turnips, corn, beans, tomatoes and everything in the vegetable line that there is raised. Cabbages as big as a bushel basket, potatoes that weighed two and a quarter and two and a half pounds each, squashes one hundred and fifty and one hundred and twenty-five pounds, beets twenty pounds, Ruta Bagas three to a bushel, onions—we had better take a back seat—the largest I ever saw, and the best of all other vegetables in the same proportion; there were also an endless count of reapers, threshers and machines of every description for harvesting work, too numerous to mention.

It has been very warm, the glass running up in the nineties to-day. The Fair commences here Tuesday; there will be a party of eighteen Indians in full costume, who will play the game La Crosse, which they say is very exciting; the fair lasts four days and they will play each day, also base ball, horse racing, hurdle racing, and lots of fun generally. It was a hot day Sunday; some difference in the Sabbath here and the manner it is spent at home. Here there is a larger number of churches than in Peabody and they are well filled every Sabbath forenoon, no service in the afternoon or evening. Go out on the street and you will see plenty of stores open, meat, confectionery, groceries, lager beer, etc. I never saw more order and not one drunken person since I have been here; the population is over 8000 people. * *

A SINGULAR REUNION OF OLD COMRADES WITH A FORMER FOE.—Gov. Jarvis of North Carolina, who visited Boston last week as the guest of the State to attend the New England Fair, was in command of a confederate company at Roanoke Island when it was surrendered to General Burnside. It was his good fortune to fall into the hands of Capt. John Hobbs of Ipswich, of the 23d Mass. Regt., after the capitulation, and the kindness and courtesy of Capt. Hobbs made a deep impression upon the minds of the captives. Col. Edw'd. H. Haskell of this city, who served in the signal corps in the same campaign, being apprized of the facts, invited Gov. Jarvis to accompany him to the Revere House where Capt. Hobbs was stopping. The recognition was mutual, and the greeting was cordial as if two long separated brothers had met after years of absence. While the two gentlemen were expressing their gratification at meeting each other under such changed and happy conditions, the door opened and another veteran entered the parlor—Capt. Henry Pardee of the 10th Conn., between whom and Gov. Jarvis the most pleasant relations have existed since the two met at the Atlanta exposition. During the conversation which followed the fact was developed that Capt. Pardee also served under Gen. Burnside at the capture of Roanoke Island, and had charge of the company which stood guard over Gov. Jarvis and his troops for eight days after they were transferred to the steamer S. R. Spaulding as prisoners of war. Nothing could better illustrate the changes affected by time, and the growing feelings of reciprocity and good will between the North and South, than the narrative of the simple accidental incidents related above.—Gloucester Advertiser.

"Roastbeeflambmuttonandham," said the waiter girl at the St. Charles.—"Well," said the old gentleman, who was being waited on, "I've never tasted it, but you may bring me some and I'll see what it tastes like."

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

The great ballet spectacle at the Boston Theatre is in full course of success. "Jalma" combines so many of the elements that appeal to the favor of the public that hardly a doubt can be entertained with regard to its career. It is sure to be long and brilliant. Since the opening representation, the performance of "Jalma" has been materially shortened, and the curtain now falls at an hour which permits suburban folk to witness the spectacle from the opening tableaux to the great transformation scene. Mr. Gayler's plot is sufficiently interesting to make the piece more than a mere pretext for the introduction of the ballet, the processions and the scenic accessories; and, in general, the acting is certainly excellent. Both Mlles. Viale and Cormani win nightly plaudits for their graceful and facile dancing, and the grand scenes of "Jalma" call forth expressions of unqualified admiration, even from the veteran play-goers.

Miss Annie Pixley, who has been playing ara at the Park, will conclude her engagement this week. She is appreciated by full audiences, and is as popular as ever. Next week Maggie Mitchell will appear at this theatre in a round of her inimitable characterizations.

Mr. D. J. Maguinnis, who has this season retired from the Boston Theatre company, among whose members, as well as with the public, he has long been a favorite, has been presented, by Mr. Tompkins, on behalf of the company, with a massive silver water-pitcher and goblets. The presentation exercises were in the presence of all the company and theatre attaches.

Rice's Surprise Party closed its month's prosperous career at the Bijou last Saturday evening, and after a fortnight on the Eastern circuit opens at Harry Miner's new People's Theatre, New York—which, by the way, Howard Paul pronounces the prettiest theatre he ever visited. Mr. Rice's enterprises have enjoyed a ten-months' run at the Bijou, with a success which was fully warranted by the merit of their productions. This week a season of light operas will open by a reconstructed version of "Virginia," in which the company which has been secured for the present season will appear. New scenery, costumes and effects will add to the interest of the occasion, and a strong cast which includes Janet Edmondson, Clara Poole, Hattie Delaro, Signor Brocolini, W. H. Fessenden and others.

Rice's Surprise Party had a good house in Mechanic Hall Monday evening. Pop, the adventures of a dramatic author, is an amusing sketch giving opportunity for the versatile talents of Mr. Mackie, and the young ladies of the company, who are young, good looking, and accomplished artists. The song "For goodness sake, don't say I told you," was encored again and again.

Next week Thursday evening, Carrie Swain, who is pleasantly remembered by her appearance last year, will play "Cad, the Tomboy," under the management of N. W. Andrews.

Friday evening Charles L. Davis with the Alvin Joslin Comedy Co. will appear under Moulton & Johnson's management.

WEST PEABODY.

By invitation from the members of the West Peabody Farmers' Club some weeks ago, a goodly number of the Essex Institute with their ladies, met with said Club on Wednesday, the 19th inst., at School House Hall in West Peabody, at 10 o'clock A. M., to hold a field meeting. The members of the Institute were met by a reception committee, consisting of the President, Mr. Taylor, and Messrs. Upham, Henderson, Viles and Farwell. Upon their arrival at the Hall, the company were divided into sections to visit such places of interest in fields, woods, etc., as could be best thought of by the members of the committee. At 1 o'clock the several parties returned to the Hall, where an excellent dinner, which had been prepared by the ladies, was ready, after which, the President of the Institute, Mr. Wheatland, called the audience to order for the purpose of concluding the day with a hall meeting, to discuss such subjects as would be of the most interest and profit to those interested. After some remarks from the President, Mr. Wheatland, he then introduced Mr. Sears, who spoke of a collection of flowers, weeds, and vines, which he had brought in, giving in detail their several historical natures, and plant growth. In answer to a question, as to the best method to destroy field weeds, most detrimental to a field crop, he said, pull them up.

Mr. Hickson followed by saying the English farmers were more thorough than the American farmers in weeding and many of the weeds growing in America resemble those growing in England, but were a nuisance. So also was the English Sparrow, here, as there, a nuisance. He said the Osage Orange Shrub makes a very substantial and hardy hedge.

W. P. Upham, Esq., next read a very interesting paper, giving a historical sketch of West Peabody, since 1645, once a part of Salem and Danvers. It is hoped that Mr. Upham will allow the contents of that paper to be published in full. Mr. Ingraham said he always had an interest in botanic and natural objects; that it behooves us to seek knowledge; that the inventor is to be honored, especially the one who invented steam power; also honor to the man who found the earth to be round; commemorate the man who wrote the first letter; try to extend knowledge that less tyranny and monarchy exist, now that slavery is abolished.

Rev. Mr. Spaulding said that as the weed was out of place, so he felt to be out of place in trying to instruct this intelligent audience upon the interesting subjects of the day. The Essex Institute has done and is doing a good work. Mr. James P. King gave a later history of West Peabody than did Mr. Upham. He said "do not cut off too much of the wood, as forests help to keep moisture, which is so much needed on many poor fields in this vicinity." He spoke of the late Hon. Daniel P. King, a highly esteemed citizen of West Peabody, as advising that more forest trees be left to grow. He said the laborer was to be respected, and should be encouraged, not harrassed or kept down. He congratulated the Essex Institute in its good work.

Mr. Conant made very appropriate remarks, encouraging the tiller of the soil, that it is not man's duty to over labor, to depress his intellectual interest in plant growth. Mr. Henderson said he felt well paid for his attendance, congratulated the members of the Essex Institute, and hoped to be able to meet them again. Mr. Kingsley spoke of Zoology, giving, in very minute details, many interesting ideas upon the subject.

Mr. Whipple, the Secretary of the Essex Institute, made a motion, that its members tender a vote of thanks to Mr. Taylor, President, and Messrs. Upham, Henderson, Farwell, Viles, and other members of the Farmers' Club, for their kindness and interest by making the occasion an enjoyable and profitable one.

SOUTH PEABODY.

The new time table of the L. & B. R. R., says that the cars will continue to run every hour through the winter, as they formerly have.

Mr. C. M. Merrow and family are visiting friends in N. H.

Andrew J. Wiggin is visiting friends in Wolfboro, N. H.

John H. Keith has added twelve feet more to his building and intends to keep a horse railroad station.

Mr. T. P. Murray has been making extensive improvements on his house and store the past week.

The So. Peabody base ball nine received another defeat at the hands of the nine from Henry Law's shop of So. Lynnfield, in Poor's field last Saturday.

Mr. Perley Galeucia, Wallace Oliver and the Annis brothers have gone on a gunning expedition to Wells, Maine, and Rochester, N. H. They are to be gone about two weeks.

Mr. Joseph Dakin's family and a number of invited guests have gone to Marblehead for a weeks vacation; they will occupy Mr. Sumner Southwick's house in the Peabody camp.

Mrs. S. S. Williams has accepted a position in the Wallis School as teacher for the remainder of the term.

Owing to the long continued drouth, the wells in this vicinity are nearly all dry.

Messrs. Hardy and Sims conducted the services at the church last Sunday.

A fair correspondent mentions the birth, on the last Sunday in August, of a son to Andrew Mansfield of Lynnfield. It seems the name of Andrew Mansfield has been continued and passed down from father to son, "as far back," as our correspondent puts it, "as they can trace the record,"—at least nine generations. Several of the line bore military titles, two at least having been known in their time as "Major Mansfield." The Andrew Mansfield who was Town Clerk of Lynn in the early days of that municipality, was an ancestor of the present highly respected Lynnfield citizen of the same name, and whose young son will of course bear the same honored name.—Salem Register.

Mr. P. J. Homer, of Malden, caught a pickerel at Pillings pond, Lynnfield, last Monday, which weighed over two pounds.

FIRE DEPARTMENT NOTES.

One thousand feet of Boston Woven Hose has just been received and will be tested after the first good rain.

The Engineers have just had shelves put into the different hose houses for the storage of a relief of dry hose.

Some of the boys are going to attend the firemen's muster in Haverhill, Oct. 1st and 2nd.

Tickets for Hose 4 fair are out, and selling very well, considering the number of fair tickets now in the market.

A delegation of the Peabody department will attend the fair of the Lynn Fireman's Relief Association some night this week. Quite a number of their tickets have been sold in this town, and some of the firemen have them on sale. There are three capital prizes of $500 each, and two of $250, and other valuable prizes.

The firemen at the brick house are talking of running a course of assemblies this winter, and some of the companies have chosen committees to make arrangements.

Swampscott will test her new Silsbee steam fire engine some day this week. This is a fourth class rotary engine, and it will cause some interest among e firemen around here, as there are but few of that make in this section.

The swing harness for Hose 1, has again been put in position, and if the horse will not work in it this time, he had better be sold and one put in his place that will.

If any one wants to see a parade of the department this fall, let them start a paper and raise the money, and then the boys will probably turn out willingly, but they don't propose to go down into their own pockets, "not this fall, some other fall." ZERO.

WHAT OUR BOY SAYS.

That his chum has just returned from a long visit to a fashionable summer resort.

That his chum is wondering how he can honorably bring his flirtation to a close without an engagement.

That he told him if he and the young lady could read each other's mind they would agree immediately to call it square and forget all about it.

That a wonderful spring has been discovered in So. Peabody.

That it will cure all diseases.

That they disappear like lemonade at a Sunday school picnic.

That it will also abolish all desire for alcoholic drinks.

That an increased Republican majority will be noticed from that part of the town in consequence.

That Jay Gould says he has arrived at that state where money making is no longer a desire.

That surprising as the confession must be coming from us, we are free to acknowledge that we have not reached Mr. Gould's position.

That he has a special reason for being glad of the rain.

That it afforded an opportunity for conversation with his girl upon something besides the dry spell.

That a roof with a ventilator on top should be put on the reservoir.

That the health journal says he ought to take three-quarters of an hour for dinner.

That he will have to live nearer the office, then, or the "boss" will find fault.

That deaf mutes use a great deal of slang.

That they learn it from the newspapers of which they are constant readers.

Mr. Luther L. Holden of the Raymond and Whitcomb Excursion Bureau left Boston this week on an extended tour through the Northwest and to the Pacific coast. The object of his journey is to complete arrangements for a series of Raymond excursions next year over new and interesting routes of travel, and he expects to be absent some two months. After brief visits to Chicago and St. Paul he will proceed to the Yellowstone Park and make a thorough inspection of the wonders of that region.

WHAT THE PEOPLE SAY

SARSAPARILLIAN HYGIENIC WINE.

What D. N. GRIFFIN, dealer in Clothing, Hats, Caps and Gents' Furnishing Goods says about it:

Having used RAYMOND'S HYGIENIC WINE in my family, I take pleasure in recommending it to the public as being a safe, delicious and highly beneficial tonic, in short all that it is claimed to be.

D. N. GRIFFIN, Beverly.

I have been acquainted with B. F. RAYMOND for five years and have always found him a man of unimpeachable character, and business integrity. What can be said of him can be said of his medicine, there is no humbug about it. DANIEL W. BARTLETT,

Chairman Selectmen, Essex.

WALTER FLINT, 29 Federal St, Beverly, Mass, says: "I had measles very badly this last winter. Was left with a bad cough and very weak. After staying at home for several weeks, after getting out of doors, I commenced to go to school. Cough was so bad and strength so poor that Physician ordered me to leave school. I took a great deal of medicine, but nothing seemed to help me. Cough seemed to grow worse instead of better. Some one recommended Sarsaparillian Hygienic Wine. I tried it, and before I had taken one half a bottle, I was back to school, and cough was better. After taking whole bottle, cough was entirely cured, and felt strong and hearty."

$1.00 per bottle; 6 bottles for $5.00.
